Kan-pa, an ancient town of China, province of Che-kiang at the head of a considerable bay 32 miles SW of Cha-pa. It was originally the port of Hangchow, but is now deserted.

Kansas, kan sas, a state of the American Union bounded N by Nebraska, E by Missouri, S by Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and W by Colorado. Its northern limit is the 40th degree of N lat. Its eastern limit is partly the Missouri River and partly the meridian of 94° 38' W; the southern boundary is on the line of the 37th degree of N lat., and it extends westward to 101° W lon. Area of the land-surface, 81,000 sq. m. of the upper part of the water 300 sq. m. In this state is the geographical centre of the United States domain exclusive of Alaska.

Face of the Country—The surface is chiefly a gently rolling prairie and there are no water falls with a greater descent than a foot, and few or no dams can be made to give as much as 10 ft. fall. The elevation of the extreme NW is 4000 ft. with the highest point in the state rising to about 4400 ft. that of the extreme SE 3400 ft. and nearly the whole state slopes to the east and south with the average fall of 7½ ft. to the mile. In the SE there are tracts of sand-hill country abounding in native small fruits. There are no mountains no ranges of any extent except a few valuable salt-crocks, almost no bluffs and only a few small and shallow lakes or ponds. The river bottoms throughout most of the state contain more or less timber including ash, elm, hackberry, cottonwood, box elder, bass, walnut, sycamore, pecan, oak, hickory, mulberry, bass, chestnut, maple, and other species, but the western half of the state is very scarcely timbered. The original timber land did not cover more than 5 per cent of the state's area, but a judicious system of planting has considerably increased the extent of the woodland.

Rivers—The Missouri forms a portion of the eastern boundary and is an important commercial highway. Its principal affluent in the state is the Kansas River which, with its largest branch the Pawnee Hill Fork traverses the whole length of the state from W to E. The Kansas River has been navigated as far as Fort Riley by steamers, but the construction of bridges and dams has interfered with the steam navigation. The Republican River on Salina, Morris des Cygnes, Blue, Neosho, Arkansas, and (unimportant) are the other principal streams. Many of these as well as their tributaries afford water power and at some points irrigation has been undertaken, but as yet on a large scale.

Geology and Mineral—The Permian and Carboniferous formations cover the eastern third of the state and have yielded considerable coal. The quantity of coal mined in 1899 was 3,852,567 short tons valued at $4,478,112. In 1903 the yield was 5,849,976 tons. In the W part of the state there is a region covered by Pliocene deposits abounding in a massive red sandstone. The remainder of the state is mostly of Cretaceous age but some 3000 sq. m. of its high prairies and hills are overlaid by patches of Pleistocene strata. The Cretaceous beds abound in flint, marl and yield much lignite and fossil wood. Other minerals of economic value are barite, gypsum, sandstone, lignite, good chalk (in the W), lead, zinc (the latter mined and smelted at several points), salt (abundant in the saltines and yielding about 2,000,000 barrels annually), fire-clay, ochre, black shales, hyd. sulfur, limestone, etc. Natural gas occurs in the SE section and has become a valuable commercial product. The petroleum wells are largely developed, the yield of oil in 1903 being 932,374 barrels, valued at $988,336. In 1900 the output of lead-ore was 5059 tons of ore, 57,275 short tons.

Vegetation, Animal Life—The principal trees of the state have already been named. To these may be added certain fruit-bearing trees and shrubs, such as the apple, plum, and cherry which are now extensively cultivated. The native grasses of all parts of the state afford excellent pasturage, which endures throughout the year. Considerable plantations of trees have been made the locust, alder, cottonwood, sycamore, and the more rapidly growing native trees are favorites. The vast plains of Kansas were until comparatively recently the pasture-grounds of great numbers of bison, antelope, and wild horses, but of these practically nothing now remains. The state is still the autumnal resort of many sportsmen, for its wild lands are the breeding-ground of countless grouse and other game-birds. The river contains some useful food-fishes, including the gar pike, sturgeon, paddle-fish, perch, eel, cat-fish, muskie and river herring. The state has had several visitations of the Rocky Mountain locust as 'hateful grasshopper' (Coleopterus spretus). Among the mammals now remaining or only recently driven beyond the boundaries of the state are the panther, lynx, wolf, fox, Texas civet, raccoon, bear, deer, opossum, hare, prairie-dog and many small species.

Climate.—The winters are often severe with high winds, but the air is so dry that the cold is easily endured. The snow fall is slight, especially southward, and the winter is much shorter than in the northern Atlantic states. In the extreme W the rainfall is scanty, but it is ordinarily sufficient for a pastoral country. The E seldom suffers from drought, for the rainfall though relatively small is quite evenly distributed throughout the year. The mean annual rainfall for the state is about 25 inches ranging from 15 inches in the W to 45 inches in the E. The E is quite within the cotton belt, and some attention has been paid to cotton-growing in the SE.

Agricultural Resources.—The bottom-land and table-lands of Kansas are for the most part a rich black loam of the highest agricultural excellence. Winter and spring wheat, corn, rye, oats, and potatoes are the great staples, and large crops of sorghum broom-corn hay hemp flax, flaxseed, castor-beans, tobacco etc. are produced. An immense business is done in fattening and shipping cattle, which are partly native-bred and partly driven in from Texas and the Cherokee country. Sheep-breeding is attracting much attention and to it the state is early adapted. Dairy farming is also largely on the increase. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were corn 163,879,630 bushels wheat, 89,438,665 bushels oats 43,663,943 bushels barley 4,181,302 bushels rye, 1,922,451 bushels potatoes, 7,245,224 bushels and hay, 4,031,461 tons. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 2,165,728 pounds.

Industries.—Hunting and meat packing is a leading industry of the state, and its products were in 1900 valued at $77,411,832. The chief seat of this industry is Kansas City. The manufacture of soap and candles and of cheese, butter and condensed milk is very extensive. The boot-making industry is also important. Other important manufactures are those of lumber, dry furniture and cabinet goods, castings, metal in ware, woollens, castor and linseed oils, dressed stone, paleo ground plaster lime, glass salt, syrup, bricks, leather shoes, carriages, machinery, cigars, tobacco, wine, and beer.

Education.—There is a state university at Lawrence and a state agricultural college at Manhattan, both free to youth of either sex. Among the collegiate institutions are the Kansas City University, Baker University at Baldwin, Bethany College at Lindsborg, Leavenworth University at Leavenworth, Friends University at Wichita, Southwest Kansas College, at Winfield, Washburn College at Topeka, Kansas Wesleyan University at Salina, and the Ottawa University at Ottawa. Normal instruction is given at the state normal school at Emporia, of the state university at the Kansas Normal College at Fort Scott, at the Central Normal College at Great Bend, and at other institutions. There is an institution for deaf mutes at Olathe, one for the blind at Kansas City, a state insane asylum at Oswatimie, and a state penitentiary near Leavenworth.

Railroads. have received a large development in Kansas. In 1864 there were 40 miles of railroad, in 1870 1501 miles, in 1884, 4237 miles, and in 1900 about 9000.

The Counties are 105 in number named as follows: Alcee, Anderson, Atchison, Barber, Barton, Bourbon, Brown, Butler, Chase, Chautauque, Cherokee, Cheyenne, Clark, Clay, Cloud, Coffey, Comanche, Cowley, Crawford, Decatur, Dickinson, Doniphan, Douglas, Edwards, Elk, Ellis, Ellsworth, Finney, Ford, Franklin, Geary, Gove, Graham, Grant, Gray, Greeley, Greenwood, Hamilton, Harper, Harvey, Haskell, Hodgeman, Jackson, Jefferson, Jewell, Johnson, Kearney, Kingman, Kiowa, Labette, Lane, Leavenworth, Lincoln, Linn, Logan, Lyon, McPherson, Marion, Marshall, Meade, Miami, Mitchell, Montgomery, Morris, Morton, Nemaha, Neosho, Ness, Norton, Osage, Ottawa, Ottawa, Pawnee, Phillips, Pottawatomie, Pratt, Rawlins, Reno, Republic, Rice, Riley, Rooks, Rush, Russell, Salina, Scott, Sedgewick, Seward, Shawnee, Sheridan, Sherman, Smith, Stafford, Stanton, Stevens, Sumner, Thomas, Trego, Wabash, Wallace, Washington, Wichita, Wilson, Woodson, and Wyandotte.

Cities and Towns.—Of these the principal are Kansas City, opposite Kansas City Mo. (pop. in 1900, 51,418); Topeka, the capital (32,000); Wichita, at the junction of the Arkansas and Little Arkansas rivers (24,671); Leavenworth (20,750); Atchison (15,730); Lawrence (14,503); Fort Scott (10,323), etc.

The Constitution of Kansas went into effect in 1861. The governor is chosen for the term of two years, as are also the other executive officers. The legislature consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 8 representatives to the lower house of Congress.

History.—Coronado's exploring party of Spaniards visited this region in 1541, crossing the country from S to N; and in 1719 a party of French traversed it. The Louisiana purchase of 1803 made the greater part of it a portion of the United States domain but a portion of southwestern Kansas was Mexican territory and afterwards part of Texas until 1860. Through the opening of the Santa Fé Trail an important overland trade passed through the region. Kansas was included successively in Louisiana and Missouri territories. In 1854 it was organized as a territory the slavery restriction clause of the Missouri Compromise of 1820 being repealed by Congress. For some years Kansas was a battle-ground of the party in favor of the extension of slavery and of those who opposed it, the latter finally triumphing. In 1861 the state was admitted into the Union.

Pop. in 1855 8401 in 1860 107,906 in 1870, 264,399 in 1880 596,096 in 1890 1,427,696 in 1900 1,476,496 (foreign-born 136,685).

Kansas City, the largest city of Kansas capital of Wyandotte co. created in 1886 by the consolidation of the three villages of Kansas City with the towns of Wyandotte, Armourdale and Armstrong under its present name, is situated at the junction of the Kansas and Missouri rivers, adjacent to Kansas City Mo. (from which it is nominally separated by the state line). It is on the Missouri Pacific and the Union Pacific R.R. This city is noted as the seat of immense stock and meat-packing interests, its yards and packing houses being second only to those of Chicago in the volume of business done. Several million head of stock are handled here yearly and the value of the 'packed' product exceeds $50,000,000. The city has also a very extensive grain and flour trade, with vast grain-elevators, railroad- and machine-shops, manufactories of soap, fertilizers, engines, locomotives etc. It is the seat of Kansas City University and of a state institution for the blind. Numerous bridges span the Kansas River within the corporate limits of the city. Pop. in 1880 2300 in 1890 38,319 in 1900 51,418.

KANSAS CITY, a city of Missouri, the second in population and importance, is in Jackson co. on the right as S bank of the Missouri River $\frac{1}{2}$ mile below the mouth of the Kansas River. Lat. 39° 8' N. Lon. 94° 37' W. It is an important railroad-centre and situated 230 miles (direct) W by N of St. Louis. Among the railroads centering here are the Missouri Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Washburn etc. Several fine bridges cross the Missouri at this point. The city is mostly built on the top and sides of a steep hill the site having been originally very rough and uneven. Among the most prominent buildings are the city hall, court-house, art-museum, Board of Trade, and custom house. The city has various higher educational institutions (Kansas City School of Law, University Medical College, Searritt Training School) opera-house, theatre, etc. and is adorned with three fine parks—Trocet, Fairmount and Washington. Elevation 730 feet. The centre of a region of extraordinary agricultural resources and bounding in coal, lead, iron etc. It has become an important commercial city doing a very large business in live-stock and grain and in manufacturing railroad-iron furniture, agricultural implements, paints, linseed oil, car-wheels, flour etc. In its vast slaughtering and packing industries it is closely associated with the adjoining Kansas City in Kansas. Pop. in 1860, 4418; in 1870 22,260 in 1880 56,755, in 1890, 122,715 in 1900 163,752.

The sovereign who is a vassal of the British, is called the Maharajah of Jummoo and Kashmir. Total area, 80,900 sq. m. Pop. in 1901 2,905,878. The region is watered by the Indus and Shyok rivers, and is traversed in the NE. by the Karakorum mountains, which have the lofty summits of Peak K² or Godwin Austen (also known as Dapsang), 28,278 feet (probably the highest mountain in the world after Mount Everest), K¹ or Masherbrum, 25,078 ft. K² 25,119 ft.; K¹ 23,764 ft., and K³ 23,906 ft. It belongs to the basin of the Indus, which traverses it from SE. to NW flowing through Ladakh, Baltistan, and Gilgit. The river Jhelum, which rises in Kashmir forms a considerable distance the W boundary on the side of the Punjab. Kashmir proper (or the Vale of Kashmir), with its surrounding mountains, occupies mainly an extensive valley of an irregular oval form, extending NW and SE, from 8500 to 9000 feet above the sea, and surrounded on all sides by lofty mountains, secondary ranges of the Himalayas. The alluvial plain in the bottom of the valley seemingly the remains of a former sea, is about 90 miles long and 35 miles in greatest width. The mountain ranges which enclose the valley are, on the N., the Darawar and Kishlam mountains; NE., the Haramuk (14,000 ft.) and Sonamur mountains; E. the snow Panjal; S. the Futi Panjal and Panjal of Benihal and W. the Pir Panjal (14,500 ft.). Many of the summits are covered with perpetual snow. The valley is actuated by passes, which are practicable for horses, but none of them for wheeled carriages. The most important are the Baramula and Poonch, on the W. frontier Benihal on the S., and Nabor on the E., all practicable at all seasons of the year, and the pass of the Pir Panjal, passable in summer 19,500 ft. The Jhelum flows NW through the centre of the valley, receiving numerous streams from both sides and expanding into the shallow Wular Lake. The whole of the valley is admirably supplied with the means of irrigation. The Vale of Kashmir has long been famous for its delightful climate and fruitfulness. All the grains are cultivated and yield bountiful crops. Among the natural productions is the Singapura (or water nut) the seed of Fragaria bhopala, on which many of the poorer inhabitants largely subsist. The principal fruits are apples, pears, plums, cherries, apricots, etc. Among the trees of Kashmir are the decidua (or Himalayan cedar), the shinar (Platanus orientalis) poplar, chestnut, lime, maple, willow, etc., on the mountains, birch, alder, and pine. Flowers, especially roses, grow in vast profusion. The mineral resources of Kashmir include iron, lead, copper, and plumbago.

Kashmir has long been celebrated for its shawls, the industry in which however has very greatly declined in late years. The wool used in their manufacture is of two kinds, one obtained from the same goat and the other from the wild goat, wild sheep, and other wild animals. Paper, saddlery and arms are also manufactured, all of superior quality. The attire of robes made in the Vale of Kashmir is in high repute. The country exports large quantities of butter.

The Kashmirians, who constitute the bulk of the inhabitants of Kashmir, represent physically a splendid type of the Hindus. About two-thirds of the population are Mohammedans. Nine-tenths of the remainder are adherents of Hinduism. In 1586 Kashmir was subjugated by Akbar and was incorporated in the Mogul Empire.

Kentucky, a south-central state of the American Union, in the Mississippi Valley bounded N by Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, E. by West Virginia and Virginia, S. by Tennessee and W. by Missouri and Illinois. The Ohio River separates it from the states on the V. its E. boundary line follows the Big Sandy River and its Tug Fork to the crest of the Cumberland Mountains, which form the SE. limit of the state; the S. boundary to the E. of the Tennessee River is approximately the parallel of 36° 30' N. and thence westward follows that of 35° 30' N. and the Mississippi River marks the W. limit. Area, 40,400 sq. m. of which 400 belong to the water-surfaces.

Face of the Country—The E. and SE. sections of Kentucky are traversed by numerous parallel and often precipitous NE and SW ranges of the Alleghany system with deep and narrow intervening valleys, the mountains not exceeding 3900 feet to extreme height and often crowned by narrow table-lands. Here are forests of beech, cedar, hemlock, laurel and holly, and many other trees, and the whole region abounds in picturesque scenery. Westward, in east-central Kentucky is the beautiful and exceedingly fertile 'blue-grass region' with a soil based upon blue limestone and famous for its immense stock-breeding and grazing interests. A portion of this tract is skirted by regions known as 'barrens', which are, however by no means barren as a rule. Westward there is a large tract which was open prairie within the memory of living men but is now well wooded. In the extreme W. there are hilly and fertile river-bottoms, which in the SW decline into swampy swamps with large shallow lakes.

Rivers—Several affluents large and small of the Ohio are adapted to steamboat navigation. The Tennessee and Cumberland rivers are important channels of commerce. The Kentucky, Green, Licking and Big Sandy admit of considerable navigation and this has been largely extended by means of slackwater improvements, such as locks, dams, and short canals. The extent of the navigable waters of Kentucky is placed at upward of 3000 miles.

Geology—The Lower Silurian limestone and other Sub-carboniferous strata extend southward from Cincinnati to a wide strip, completely dividing the extensive coal-bearing fields of the E. and W. from each other. This tract is girt about by a wide belt of Sub-carboniferous or cavernous limestone, which supports noble forests and excellent farms, as well as wide barrens. The mountain region of eastern Kentucky abounds in beds of bituminous, black and cannel coals and is plentifully supplied with excellent iron ores. It is also finely timbered and has an abundance of salt-licks and springs, and petroleum is obtained at various points. The area of the eastern coal field is put at 10,000 sq. m. The western coal-field has an area of 4500 sq. m. bordering upon Illinois and Indiana, and containing both block and cannel coals. The quantity of coal mined in the state in 1899 representing the product of 87 mines was 4,607,255 (short) tons, valued at $3,618,222. In 1901 the output was 6,469,986 tons; in 1903 4,379,000 tons. In the abundance and richness of its iron-ores, Kentucky holds an important position. This source of wealth however has hitherto been but little exploited. The product of the iron-mines in 1893 amounted to 25,327 long tons of red hematite and 8900 tons of brown hematite (total value, $46,847). Spoons and other nathurite salts are manufactured to some extent from the natural mineral waters, and nitre has been obtained from the cavern-earth. The SW part of the state is of the Cretaceous and Tertiary formations.

Climate—The climate of the state is salubrious and not marked by accidental extremes of temperature. The summer heat rises to about 100° while the cold of winter descends but rarely to zero. The average January temperature is about 35° and the July temperature 78°. Over almost the entire state there is a generous rainfall, which averages for the year about 40 inches.

Agricultural Resources—Kentucky has a high reputation as a stock-raising state. Its splendid herds of short-horn cattle and excellent thoroughbred horses have a world-wide fame. Not less important is the breeding of mules of which many thousands are yearly exported, largely to the Gulf states, and of swine, chiefly marketed at Louisville and Cincinnati. The blue-grass furnishes pasture throughout the year. The wool product is large and of excellent quality. Wheat of high excellence is a leading crop. Indian-corn, hemp, and tobacco are productions for which the climate is especially adapted. The leading agricultural crops were, in 1900: corn 90,307,224 bushels; wheat, 12,442,848 bushels; oats 3,304,293 bushels; rye, 234,503 bushels; potatoes, 2,607,487 bushels; and hay 280,064 tons. The annual yield of tobacco is from one-third to one-half of that of the entire United States. In 1900 there were upward of 330,000 acres under cultivation with this product. The washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool clip of 1900 was 2,701,878 pounds.

Industries—The leading industry of the state is the manufacture of tobacco, the product of which in 1900 was valued at $21,622,111. In 1899 there were in the state 643 manufacturing factories of cigars and tobacco, the combined product from which was 64,323,245 cigars and 48,032,452 pounds of plug fine-cut, and smoking tobacco. The manufacture of iron and steel and meat packing are among the leading industries of the state. Whiskey is a leading product of the central belt. In 1900 the value of the produced alcoholic and malted liquors was $12,973,154. Cooperage, glass-blowing, flour and lumber-milling, and the production of wool, iron and cotton goods, rope, bagging, furniture, carriages, and machinery all employ considerable capital. The lumber and timber-products of the state were in 1900 valued at $13,749,911. Salt is largely made by evaporation or boiling from the natural saline waters.

Railroads—This state early developed a splendid system of man-made roads, which with her navigable streams for many years gave her a preeminence in point of internal communication. In 1841 it had 28 miles of railroad; in 1848 28 miles; in 1860 574 miles; in 1870 1017 miles; in 1890 2546 miles; in 1900 3127 miles.

Education—In 1793 the Transylvania University (now Kentucky University) was founded at Lexington and other colleges and academies soon followed. With Kentucky University are affiliated the state agricultural college (also at Lexington) and several professional schools. Among the collegiate institutions are the Central University at Richmond, the Berea College, and numerous denominational academies and seminaries at Georgetown, Louisville, Mayville, etc. There are special schools of theology, law, medicine, pharmacy and military science. There are state and other normal schools at Corinth, Bowling Green, Madisonville and elsewhere, and for colored, at Frankfort. There is a state institution for deaf-mutes at Danville. There is a state institution for feeble-minded at Frankfort, state insane hospitals at Lexington, Hopkinsville, and Anchorage, state penitentiaries at Frankfort and Eddyville.

Objects of Interest in To-day—Among these we notice first the Mammoth Cave (which see) and the other numerous caves and sink of the state; the salt-licks; the beautiful pink like forests of the blue-grass country; Redfoot Lake, in the SW; and the numerous mounds, rock houses and fortifications built by some aboriginal people.

Counties—Kentucky in 1900 was divided into 119 counties: Adair, Allen, Anderson, Ballard, Barren, Bath, Bell, Boone, Bourbon, Boyd, Boyle, Bracken, Breathitt, Breckinridge, Bullitt, Butler, Caldwell, Callaway, Campbell, Carlisle, Carroll, Carter, Casey, Christian, Clark, Clay, Clinton, Crittenden, Cumberland, Davies, Edmonson, Elliott, Estill, Fayette, Fleming, Floyd, Franklin, Fulton, Gallatin, Garrard, Grant, Graves, Grayson, Green, Greenup, Hancock, Hardin, Hart, Harrison, Hart, Henderson, Henry, Hickman, Hopkins, Jackson, Jefferson, Jessamine, John, son, Kenton, Knott, Knox, Laramie, Laurel, Lawrence, Lee, Leslie, Letcher, Lewis, Lincoln, Livingston, Logan, Lyon, Madison, Magoffin, Marion, Marshall, Martin, Mason, Meade, Mercer, Meigs, Menard, Meserve, Merrett, Metcalfe, Meigs, Montgomery, Morgan, Muhlenburg, Nelson, Nicholas, Ohio, Oldham, Owen, Owsley, Pendleton, Perry, Pike, Powell, Pulaski, Robertson, Rockcastle, Rowan, Russell, Scott, Shelby, Simpson, Spencer, Taylor, Todd, Trigg, Trimble, Union, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Whitley, Wolfe and Woodford.

Cities and Towns—Of these the principal are Louisville, at the falls of the Ohio the commercial metropolis of the state (pop. in 1900 304,731); Covington (42,688) and Newport (28,301) manufacturing cities on the Ohio, opposite Cincinnati; Lexington the emporium of the blue-grass country (35,366); Paducah, on the lower Ohio (10,446); Owensboro (12,189) and Henderson (10,372) both large tobacco markets on the Ohio; Frankfort, the state capital (9487); and Bowling Green (8390).

Government, History—The governor and other executive officers are chosen for the term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a Senate, whose members are elected for 4 years, and a House of Representatives, elected for 2 years. The ships send 21 representatives to the lower house of Congress.

In 1799 Daniel Boone established himself in this region, which was claimed by Virginia, and was followed by numerous hardy adventurers from Virginia and North Carolina. The first permanent settlement was made at Harrodsburg in 1774. In 1775 the settlers organized a local government and gave their new country the name of Transylvania, but in 1776 Virginia declared the whole region a county and afterwards a district, of her own. After a long dispute as to the terms of separation, the people were finally permitted to set up an independent government, and in 1792 Kentucky was received into the Union as a state with its present limits. Kentucky being a slave state, many of her people sympathized with the South during the war of 1861-65, but the Union party sustained by the presence of Federal troops was strong enough to prevent the secession of the state, which was the arena of several active campaigns.

Population.—In 1790 the population was 73,677. In 1800 230,955. In 1810, 406,511. In 1820 554,135. In 1830 687,917. In 1840 779,828. In 1850 932,496. In 1860 1,155,684. In 1870 1,321,011. In 1880 1,643,699. In 1890 1,858,635. In 1900 2,147,174. The negro population in 1900 was 234,700 and the foreign-born 56,249.

Kentucky River is formed by the North South, and Middle Forks which rise in the Cumberland Mountains and unite at Proctor A. It runs generally northward with many abrupt deviations from a direct course, and enters the Ohio River at Carrollton. Its length is about 250 miles. Steamboats ascend it to Frankfort, the capital of the state. Near this place the river runs in a deep channel between perpendicular walls of limestone. It traverses a beautiful and fertile country.

This region includes the Russian governments of Turgai, Uralisk, Syr Darya, and Terek in Asia, and that of Orenburg in Europe, embracing a large part of the steppes eastward of the Volga as far as the E. end of Lake Balkash. The surface of the country (the more northerly parts of which are known geographically as the Kirghiz Steppe) is traversed by many mountain-chains, but it chiefly consists of barren plains abounding in salt lakes. The inhabitants are nomadic, their principal occupation being the rearing of sheep, goats, horses, and camels. Some land on riverbanks, however, is tilled for millet, rice, and barley. The Kirghis proper, who call themselves Kazaks, whom they are known as Kirghis-Kazaks (Kazak-Kirghis) have pronounced Mongolian affinities. They are divided into the so-called Great, Little, and Middle herds. Their religion is a compound of Islamism and idolatry. The subjection of the Kirghis-Kazaks to the empire of Russia was effected in the latter part of the eighteenth century and the early part of the nineteenth, and they are now active allies of the Russians. They number about 1,500,000. Korea, kō-rēa (called by the natives Kori and Chosin, the latter the Chinese form of which is Chao-sien, meaning morning freshness - Japanese, Ko-ri, ko-ri official designation Dai Han) an empire and peninsula country of eastern Asia, bounded E. by the Sea of Japan, SE. by the Strait of Korea, W. by the Yellow Sea, and NW and N by Manchuria, from which it is separated by the Yalu and Tumen rivers and the Pa-shan mountains. Its latitudinal extent is between the parallels of 34° 40' and 43° N with S and E. length of about 560 miles. Korea also includes numerous groups of islands in the Yellow Sea and the Strait of Korea and the island of Quelpart, 50 miles S. of the peninsula. Area, about 82,000 sq m. Population estimated at from 8,000,000 to 15,000,000. The number of inhabitants liable to taxation was officially given in 1900 as 4,608,151

The peninsula is traversed through its length by a mountain-range (known in its northern and southern parts as the Ham-gyong-Do and the Kang-wang-Do respectively) abrupt and precipitous on the E but forming a gentle slope on the W side, which being watered by the principal rivers of the country (none of which is important), is exceedingly fertile. The Pal-shan (Palk ta-san or Palk tan-shan) or 'White Mountain' in the N is an extinct volcano, and rises to 9000 feet. The coasts are for the most part rocky and almost inaccessible yet there are some excellent harbours. The climate is on the whole salubrious, cold in winter and hot in summer, the range of temperature being from near zero to about 90°-95°. The average annual rainfall is about 36 inches the precipitation however being subject to great fluctuations. In the N the grains that can be grown with advantage are barley and oats, but in the S the soil is fertile, and wheat, cotton, rice, millet, beans, tobacco, and hemp are grown extensively. The glassing root is a product of Korea, greatly valued in China and Japan. The uncultivated northern parts of the kingdom are covered with extensive forests of pine, fir, oak, maple, birch, ash etc. Fruits are abundant, including the pear, plum, strawberry, mulberry, blackberry, apricot, and grape but, on account of the continual summer rains, all are insipid. Gold, silver, copper, rock-salt, iron, and coal are found, but were not wrought to any extent until recent years. Gold mining concessions are now held by Americans (at Wöosan) Russians (at Ham-heung), Germans (Tung Ke Kwi) Japanese (S of Seoul) French and English (Ulsan). The quantity of gold exported in 1900 was 4,101 366 yon, or about $2,043,000. The principal coal mines are at Ping yang. The domestic animals are oxen, pigs, goats, dogs, and cats, and a small race of horses, very strong and spirited. Oxen almost alone are used for agricultural labor. Sheep are almost unknown owing to the prohibition against rearing them. The royal tiger and panther were until recently very numerous, and their hides formed an important article of commerce. Korean musk is much used as a medicine and perfume.

The manufactures of Korea have greatly declined. They comprise strong and coarse tissues of hemp, cotton silk and green masts, bamboo corsets, mixed wares and especially paper out of which are made hats, umbrellas, doors, sacks, and cloaks. A match factory was established in Seoul in 1901.

The foreign commerce is still mainly with China and Japan but the trade with European countries and the United States has been increasing materially as the result of the commercial treaties which followed rapidly upon that of 1842 with the United States. Seoul (Haeal) and the ports of Chemulpo, Fusan, Wöosan (Gensan) Chinnampo Mokpo, Kusan, Memsampo, and Songchön are now open to foreign trade and commerce and this condition is considered to be semi-officially so for the inland city of Ping yang, whose extensive coal fields are operated chiefly by the Japanese. The chief articles of export are rice ($174,400 yon in 1900), beans, cow hides, ginseng, gold, and copper. The development of internal commerce is greatly retarded by the primitive methods of communication. Transport is by porters, oxen, and pack-horses. The lines of railroad are still extremely limited a railway connects Chemulpo with Seoul and other roads, originated by the exigencies of the Russo-Japanese war are now (1905) in course of construction. There were, in 1900, 3178 miles of telegraph in operation.

Korea is governed by an emperor (title assumed in 1397) whose sway in a measure absolute, is modified by a cabinet and council of ministers, the central government consisting of 10 departments—those of the cabinet, home office, foreign office, treasury, war office, education, justice, agriculture (trade and industry), household, and police. The empire is divided for administrative purposes into 13 to or provinces, and these again subdivided into 339 kūn or districts. The mass of the common people are either believers in Buddhism (which prevails in a degraded form) or else sunk in spirit-worship coupled with all kinds of superstitious Confucian, much esteemed, has many followers among the higher classes, on whom ancestor worship has a strong hold. Korean life presents as a great measure the characteristics of life in China. There is a noble or privileged class. The women live in seclusion. There are many thousand Christians, mainly Catholics. The Koreans are a Mongolian people. Their language is of the agglutinative type, very different from the Chinese, and is written with individual alphabetic characters. Chinese is employed in official documents and business correspondence, and has become the literary language of the country. Korean literature, which is not important, is modelled mainly upon that of China.

In the Middle Ages Korea was a flourishing state under the Wang dynasty. Eventually it was compelled to place itself under the suzerainty of China, to whose ruler an annual tribute was paid. The western world possessed no knowledge of the country before the middle of the seventeenth century. Until recently the Koreans shut themselves off from foreign nations. In 1877-81 the principal ports were opened to the Japanese. The United States made a commercial treaty in 1882 and other leading foreign powers in 1883, 1884, 1886, 1892, 1899, 1901, and 1902. China continued to claim full suzerainty until 1894-1895 when by the treaty of Shimonoseki (May 1895) closing the disastrous war with Japan this suzerainty was renounced and Japanese influence introduced. Korea was to some extent the theatre of military operations at the beginning of the Russo-Japanese war which brought the country virtually under the control of Japan. The capital is Seoul which in 1912 had a population of 196,646. The foreign population of the country comprised in 1902 about 19,000 Japanese, 5000 Chinese, 275 Americans, 140 British, 30 Russians, etc.

La Bourbouille, lâ-bôon-bôol a hamlet of France in Puy-de-Dôme, 23 miles SW of Clermont-Ferrand, on the Dordogne, with mineral springs and baths

Labrador, lab-râ-dor or lab-râ-dôr' a peninsula on the N coast of British North America lat. from 36° to $62^{\circ} 30'$ N and lon. 54° to $80^{\circ} W$ bounded on the SE. and E by the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic Ocean on the N and W by Hudson Strait and Hudson Bay and on the SW by the province of Quebec (a considerable portion of which is included within the area of the peninsula) from which it is in part separated by the Rupert River and Lake Mistassini Area, about 500 000 sq m. Blanc Sablon, near the mouth of the North West River is the E. boundary of that portion of the peninsula which belongs to the province of Quebec, or the area which drains into the river and gulf of St. Lawrence The portion belonging to Newfoundland is that which is drained by rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean The remaining area, draining into Hudson Bay is frequently called East Main, and forms the unorganized territory of Ungava

The interior of Labrador is still imperfectly known but it consists in great part of an elevated and glaciated plateau of from 1800 to 2000 feet elevation, bordered on the coast by mountains of 3000-5000 ft. in altitude, and reaching in a few places 8000 ft. (between Nachvak and Cape Chudleigh) The surface of this plateau whose area is thought to exceed 200 000 sq m. and on which is found the water parting for the different streams, is largely bare-rock and contains numerous marshes and lakes The coast is deeply indented with fjords the largest on the Atlantic side being Hamilton Inlet On the N is the large and open Ungava Bay The Hudson Bay shore is mainly low although rising between Cape Jones and Portland Promontory to 2000 ft.

The principal rivers are the East Main (or Stude) which flows W into the SE extremity of James Bay, the Big River, and the Great and Little Whale rivers, which flow westward into Hudson Bay the Koksoak which falls into Ungava Bay the Grand (or Hamilton) which joins the Atlantic Ocean in Hamilton Inlet; and the Manicouagan, which flows southward into the St. Lawrence. The largest of the numerous lakes is Mistassini. The magnificent Grand Falls, on the Grand (or Hamilton) River are among the most imposing water falls of the world.

The prevailing rocks on the coast are granite, gneiss and mica-slate. Above these, in some parts, is a massive bed of red sandstone, followed by limestone. The Archæan or Aztec rocks seem to constitute the great mass of the interior plateau. In the valleys, where the soil is sandy and the temperature considerably above the average, juniper, birch, and poplar trees are found growing and form a covert during the summer for deer, bears, wolves, foxes, martens, otters, etc. till the approach of winter drives them to the coast

The climate is too severe to ripen any of the ordinary cereals. Barley makes excellent fodder, potatoes and several species of culinary vegetables do well. The whole of this vast wilderness is uninhabited by civilized men with the exception of a few settlements on the St. Lawrence and Atlantic coasts and some widely-separated trading and mission posts. Wandering tribes of Eskimos occupy the N and E coasts of Labrador while Naskapee, Mi'kmaq and Montagnais Indians are thinly scattered over the interior. The exports which are chiefly through Newfoundland, are codfish, salmon, seal and whale oil and furs. Once the country was rich in fur-bearing animals and caribou or reindeer, but these are now greatly reduced in numbers.

The Indians who inhabit the interior of Labrador are all of the Algonquin race. Nearly all of them profess the Roman Catholic faith. They bring down furs to the coast and exchange them for ammunition and clothing. The Eskimos extend southward to Hamilton Inlet, those of the Hopedale being of mixed blood. They number about 1000 on the Atlantic coast. They are mild and hospitable. During the brief Labrador summer the whole coast for 500 miles N. of the Strait of Belle Isle swarms with fishermen from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and the United States engaged in the capture and cure of seal cod, salmon, salmon-trout, and herring.

The chief European settlements on the E coast consist of Battle Harbor and Rigault and the Mission stations Nauy Okkak, Hopedale, Hebron, Zoar, Makkowik and Ramah. The Hudson Bay Company has several settlements in Labrador and receives valuable furs from it. The total population is thought not to exceed 10 000.

Labrador was probably visited by the Norsemen about the beginning of the eleventh century. The Portuguese navigator Cortereal landed on the coast about 1600. The name Labrador was given to the region because it was thought that the natives would make excellent laborers or, in other words, slaves.

Lapland (native, Samiende la-mo-lu (la Sw Leppmark lapp mark Russ Laplándiya l'ap lán de-ya) an extensive territory with no precise limitations in the N part of Europe, between about lat 65° and 71° N reaching from the shores of Norway E to the White Sea. Area, about 160 000 sq m, of which more than one-half, situated E of the Tornea and its tributary the Muonio, belongs to Russia while the remainder is shared between Sweden and Norway Lapland is accordingly not the name of any political division The Norwegian portion is included in the amt of Finnmark the Swedish portion in the lano of Norrbotten and Westerboten and the Russian portion is partly in Finland and partly in the peninsula of Kola. Both from geographical position and from physical conformation Lapland is one of the most forbidding regions of the globe, consisting either of rugged mountains, some of them covered with perpetual snow or of vast monotonous tracts of moraine wastes. The highest summit of Sweden, the Kebnekaise (7015 feet) lies in this region.

Swedish Lapland has recently risen to economic importance through the exploitation of iron deposits at Gällivare, a short distance N of the Arctic Circle, which are among the richest in the world and which have been made accessible by rail both from the Gulf of Bothnia and from the Norwegian coast. This extensive territory appears to have been at one time wholly occupied by the people to whom it owes its name but its southern and better portions have been gradually encroached upon by Norwegians, Swedes and Finns, till the Lapplanders (Lapps) proper have in a great measure been pressed beyond the Arctic Circle. There they retain their distinctive features and ancient customs and follow their favorite modes of life, either as mountaineers, Lapplanders leading a nomadic life and pasturing large reindeer herds, or as shore Lapplanders, who dwell upon the coast and subsist chiefly by fishing. The total population of the region has been estimated to be about 100,000 of which not more than 25,000-30,000 are true or full-blooded Lapps. The Lapps speak a language allied to that of the Finns but between the two nations there is a traditional dislike the result of ages of hostility. The chief characteristics of the Lapps are low stature seldom exceeding 4 feet 9 inches in height, great muscular power, a large head, dark, long and glossy hair, small brown eyes, obliquely placed wide mouth with ill-defined lips, a scanty beard and a skin of a yellow dingy hue. The Lapplanders are not deficient either in intellectual or in moral capacity. They are simple-hearted, hospitable, and inclined to practice the duties of Christianity which they all profess, under the form of Lutheranism in Norway and Sweden, and that of the Greek Church in Russia.

La Plata, Rio de, res e dá la plá ta, or the Plate River, a great estuary of South America formed by the junction of the Paraná and Uruguay rivers, in lat. 34° and draining through its numerous tributaries a great part of the Argentine Republic the whole of Paraguay most of Uruguay with considerable portions of Bolivia and Brazil. The estuary resulting from this union is 190 miles in length from NW to SE and where it joins the Atlantic Ocean between Maldonado and Cape San Antonio is 135 miles across. Its muddy waters can be traced in the ocean 100 miles from its mouth. The total length of the La Plata, with its longest arm (the Paraná) has been estimated at nearly 2300 miles; and from the ocean to the island of Apopo, in the Paraná at least 1360 miles, there is a continuous navigable waterway. The Aguapey, an affluent of the Paraguay (which is in itself a tributary of the Paraná) in the state of Matto Grosso, Brazil, near lat. 15° 45' S lon. 59° 20' W, is separated only by a very narrow portage from the Alegre, a tributary of the Guaporé, and a canal made to connect the two streams has been cut. By this canal direct communication is made between the Amazon and La Plata systems of waters. During flood water it is estimated that 2,000,000 cubic feet are passed out of the estuary per second. The estuary is rapidly silting, the mean depth at Montevideo being now only 15 feet. Of the various estuarine channels the Paraná Guazú is alone available for large ocean vessels. Area of drainage basin about 1,200,000 sq. m.

Lebanon, 18h q-non (a Semitic name meaning the white, L. Zib'ane) a mountain-chain of Syria, extending parallel with the coast of the Mediterranean, at a short distance from the sea, to which it gives project. It stretches for a distance of about 100 miles from the river Litany (Leontes) which empties into the sea near Tyre, northward to the Nahr al-Kebir in the vicinity of Tripoli and Homa. It is one of two parallel ranges, the other to the E being known as the Anti Lebanon or Anti Lebanon. Between the two is the narrow, fertile valley called El-Baka, the ancient Cais-Syna. The Lebanon rises to the peak Dhor el-Khodh and Jebel-Makmal to a height of a little more than 10 000 feet, being somewhat higher than the Anti Lebanon. The general elevation of the crest is between 9000 and 7000 ft above the sea, the valley of El Baka is elevated about 1800 ft. The Lebanon presents mainly a formation of limestones whose whiteness has given the range its name. The mountains are deeply cleft with ravines and chasms and the upper parts are bare and desolate. The eastern slope, which is more abrupt than the western, is almost barren. There are, however, many fruitful and well watered valleys, nearly all on the western side, and in numerous places the slopes are terraced and brought into a high state of cultivation. Immense plantations of mulberry trees, olive groves, fig and other orchards vineyards and patches of grain attest the unending industry of the sturdy mountain folk. Hundreds of little villages are perched on the steep declivities. The forests of cedars that in ancient times were such a source of riches in the Lebanon are now represented by a few hundred trees. Two rivers flow in opposite directions through the valley of El Baka, the Nahal Asi (the ancient Orontes) towards the N and the Litany towards the S. Snow is found in the ravines throughout the year. A railroad, connecting Beirut with Damascus, crosses the range. The chief industry of the people is the production of silk. Many sheep and goats are reared. The bulk of the inhabitants are Christians, mostly Maronites. The greatest part of the non-Christians are the Druses, who are substantially Mohammedans. Since the massacres perpetrated by the Druses upon the Christians in 1860 the Lebanon has had a Christian governor and has been under the protection of the European powers. The population of the province is in the neighborhood of 250 000.

Liege, lee'zh (I. Leodun, Leigis, Dutch Luik, luik, luik) a city of Belgium, capital of the province of Liege, 54 miles N by S of Brussels. It is picturesque, situated on the Meuse, at the influx of the Ourthe, and is surrounded by a circle of forts. The Meuse divides the city into the old town on the left bank, in which are the citadel and principal public buildings, and the new town on the right, containing the numerous manufacturing establishments and the homes of large numbers of the artisans. The newer sections are well built and even in the old and cramped quarters of the city many improvements have been made. Of the numerous open places the most attractive is the Square d'Avroy. The most noteworthy edifices are the magnificent church of St. Jacques (seventh century), the church of St. Paul, now the cathedral, founded in the tenth century and rebuilt in the thirteenth with five chimneys, the church of Sts. Cross (founded in the tenth century) with an octagonal tower, the church of St. Barthélemy with an interesting twelfth-century font, the imposing Gothic church of St. Martin, the church of St. Denis, the handsome Aedemijn des Beaux Arts, the Théâtre Royal built after the model of the Odéon at Paris, the splendid Palais de Justice, and the town hall. Liege has a university founded in 1817 which has over 1800 students, among them many foreigners. The university library contains about 200,000 volumes. Affiliated with the university are the School of Mines, Arts and Manufactures and the School of Electricity. The city possesses a notable conservatory of music and an academy of art.

Liege owes its great industrial prosperity to its situation in the center of a rich coal district. Some of the mines actually extend under the streets and houses. The oldest and most important branch of industry is the manufacture of arms, including cannon. There are extensive manufactures of machinery and articles of steel and iron and the textile industry is also well represented. Among other articles produced in Liege are watches, gold and silverware, leather, paper, oil, tobacco, and shoeing. Year by year is famous with its vast machine-shops. Liege is the seat of an active commerce. The town is the center of the Walloon country. The population has nearly tripled since the middle of the nineteenth century. Pop. in 1900, 173,706. Liege has since Frankish times been the seat of a bishop. The bishops of Liege were among the princes of the Holy Roman (German) Empire and ruled a large territory. Liverpool, a city and county borough of England within the territorial limits of Lancashire, the third city of Great Britain and after London the leading commercial port of Europe, is situated on the E bank of the Mersey estuary 3 miles from the Irish Sea and 175 miles NW of London. Lat. of observatory 53° 24' 4" N. lon. 3° 4' 20" W. Pop. in 1881 82 000. In 1881 375 000. In 1891 532 425. In 1891 629 348. In 1901 inclusive of Walton-on-the-Hill, Wavertree, West Derby and Toxteth Park united suburbs, 694,968. Liverpool has a pre-eminently commercial aspect. It extends several miles in length over gently rising ground the highest point within the border being about 250 feet above the quay wall of the river. Though irregularly laid out, it has many broad streets, light and hand some thoroughfares. The busiest of these is Castle Street, the 'embellishment of Liverpool's character and the centre of its system. Along the shore there is a line of dock and basins over 6 miles in length having an aggregate water area of 390 acres and a quay space 76 miles in extent, reclaimed from the river. The warehousing room attached to these docks is very extensive grain cotton and tobacco, especially are stored in great quantities. The principal docks are the Mersey, Alexandra (with a water area of 44 acres), Langton, Canada, Waterloo, Prince's, King's, Queen's, and Stanley Docks. The huge Canada Graving Dock measures 925 ft. in length. Other large docks are found at Birkenhead opposite Liverpool and connected with that city by the Mersey Tunnel 2 miles in length. The great Landing Stage of Liverpool a vast quay serving as the starting point of ocean steamers is 2455 ft. in length and rises on about 80 piers. The old public building of the city is the town hall erected in 1754 and nearly adjoining it is the exchange, the construction of which was begun in 1864. Other buildings of note are the municipal offices (erected in 1860), custom-house, public library, Free Public Museum, Walker Free Art Gallery, Royal Institution and St. George's Hall—the last named erected in 1838-54 in the form of a Graeco-Roman temple, 690 ft. in length being the finest architectural feature of the city. It contains a public meeting hall, courts, and public offices. The more advanced educational institutions are the University of Liverpool, Liverpool Institute, Liverpool College, Government School of Art and the Medical School. Botanical gardens and public parks form with the private grounds open at times to the public, an almost continuous band of open spaces on the landward side of the city. In the extreme S is Sefton Park covering an area of about 400 acres, and elaborately laid out. Other parks are Prince's and Stanley. Among the municipal undertakings recently executed is an aqueduct 63 miles long which brings water from Wyrnwy Lake, in Wales. The municipal authority has erected many dwellings for the working people. The leading industries of Liverpool are milling iron and steel working, sugar refining, ship-building and the manufacture of ropes and chemicals. The city has also important manufactures of watches and jewelry, glass works, brass-foundries, distilleries and breweries and there are extensive works for making steam engines, machinery, chains, cables, anchors, etc. But the city owes its chief importance to its being a great seat of foreign export and import trade. It is the main outlet for the manufactures of Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Staffordshire and carries on the principal part of the trade of England with Australia, America, India, Africa and the Mediterranean. The Mersey at high water may be entered by the largest ships, vast sums having been expended on the river in securing safe anchorage and dock accommodation. Nearly all the raw cotton imported into Great Britain is brought to Liverpool. The entire foreign commerce of Liverpool in 1900 was valued at £227 350 000. The imports in 1899 were £118 000 000 of which the value of the raw cotton was £22 500 000 and of grain and flour £14,800 000. The exports during the same year amounted to £8 300 000 84 per cent of which represented British products. In the value of its exports Liverpool surpasses London. The merchant marine consisted in 1890 of 1060 steamers and of 1925 sailing vessels, registering together 2 260 000 tons. Liverpool is connected by steamship lines with the principal ports of the world. The borough is divided into 28 wards and governed by a mayor, 28 aldermen and 84 councillors. It sends 6 members to the House of Commons. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic and of an Anglican bishop. Liverpool was still a village in the time of Queen Elizabeth and in 1700 the population was only about 6000. It rose to great commercial importance in the course of the eighteenth century the active participation of its merchants in the slave-trade serving to lay the foundations of its prosperity. The soil is fertile, yielding large crops of cereals, potatoes, flax, etc. Stock raising and dairying are extensively carried on. The population is very mixed and mostly Lutheran. The aristocracy and the burgher class are mainly Germans. The peasantry is composed in great part of Letts and Esths. The Russians form only about 5 percent of the population. There are a number of Jews. The capital is Riga. There is a famous university at Durpat (Yuriev). Pop in 1897 1 300 840. In the thirteenth century the heathen Letts dwelling on the shores of the Baltic were subjugated by the knights Swordbearers and Teutonic Knights, who introduced German civilization. In 1561 the grand master of the knights Swordbearers ceded the region to Lithuania. It then became a part of the Polish realm but in the course of the seventeenth century passed by conquest to Sweden. At the beginning of the eighteenth century Peter the Great of Russia wrested it from the Swedes. The Livs from whom the province takes its name are a Finnish people. They have been almost entirely absorbed in the other nationalities of the Baltic region and now there are fewer than 3000 persons speaking the Liv language. These live in Courland.

Lombardy, lom-bar-de (It. Lombardia lom-ba-ria) a division of Italy as called from the Lombards (or Longobards) a Germanic people, who took possession of a large part of Italy in the second half of the sixth century. It now constitutes a compartimento of the kingdom of Italy comprising the provinces of Bergamo, Brescia, Como, Cremona, Mantua, Milan, Pavia, and Sondrio. Area, about 9374 sq m. Pop. in 1901 4 282 723. It is bounded on the N by Switzerland and Tyrol and lies between Piedmont on the W and Venetia on the E. It consists mainly of a rich plain traversed by the Po, Ticino, Adda, Oglio, and other rivers abundantly irrigated and supplied with navigable canals but the N is covered by the Alps. Lago Maggiore and Lago di Garda are on the W and E borders respectively. Lakes Como and Inco are within Lombardy and part of Lago di Lugano projects into it. Among the principal products are maize, wheat, rice, silk, wine, and cheese. Fruit thrives and there are rich pastures. With respect to manufactures, Lombardy is the leading division of Italy. The principal city is Milan.

The Lombard kingdom in Italy endured only about two centuries. In 774 it was overthrown by Charles the Great, ruler of the Franks. Two centuries later Lombardy became part of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation. The flourishing cities grew to be little republics and having formed the Lombard League successfully contended, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries against the domination of the German emperors. Before the close of the Middle Ages the dukes of Milan had established their sway over the greater part of Lombardy. In the first half of the sixteenth century the duchy of Milan became a possession of Spain. At the beginning of the eighteenth century this territory passed by conquest to Austria, which at the same time took possession of the duchy of Mantua. Austrian rule was interrupted by the conquests of Bonaparte. In 1815 the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom was constituted as a part of the Austrian Empire. In 1848 there was an unsuccessful rising against Austria. In 1859 Lombardy was wrested from Austria and annexed to the kingdom of Sardinia, and in 1862 it became part of the new kingdom of Italy.

London, lōn dōn (L. Londinium. Fr. Londres; Sp. Londres. It. L. adre) the capital of England and the seat of government of the British Empire, and the most populous city of the world situated on both banks of the Thames, 69 miles from its mouth in the estuary of the Thames, Essex, and Kent. The metropolis consists of the so-called City comprised within an area of a little more than one square mile (which has an individual administration and is presided over by the Lord Mayor) and 28 metropolitan boroughs, as follows: Battersea, Bermondsey, Bethnal Green, Lambeth, Chelsea, Deptford, Finsbury, Holborn, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith, Hampstead, Islington, Kensington, Lambeth, Lewisham, Paddington, Poplar, St. Marylebone, St. Pancras, Shoreditch, South West, Stepney, Stoke Newington, Wandsworth, City of Westminster and Woolwich. The City proper sends 2 members to parliament, the metropolitan boroughs send 67 members and the University of London has a single member. In 1839 the administrative county of London was organized, consisting nearly with the collective area of the parliamentary boroughs. This comprises 117 sq m. Beyond this is a five-fold area included, together with London County, in the Metropolitan and City of London Police Districts. The area of Greater London is about 700 sq m. but even beyond this there is a large array of towns some of them of great size, whose activities are in great measure merged in those of the capital. Lat. of St. Paul's Cathedral 51° 30' 49" N. lon. 0° 5' 43" W of Greenwich.

Metropolitan London extends from Woolwich on the E to Kew on the W over a length of about 16 miles. It comprises upward of 600,000 buildings. Unlike what prevails in the great cities of the Continent, the dwelling houses of London are mostly small, a large proportion of them being occupied by a single family. The very poor however live in great part in crowded tenements, vast numbers of families having dwelling places consisting of only a single room. The rate of mortality is remarkably low. London may be conveniently divided into the City and the East End, or that portion of the metropolis which lies E of the law-buildings of the Temple and in which is centred the commercial activity of the city and the West End that portion of the metropolis lying W of the Temple.—London of the clubs, museums, galleries of art, theatres, government offices, Houses of Parliament, Westminster Abbey the main scene of the aristocracy and the royal palace. In a further subdivision we have well-defined districts lying on opposite sides of the Thames: those of Whitechapel, Houndsditch and the Minories (quarters of the Jews), Bethnal Green and Spitalfields (centres of the furniture, and boot- and shoe-industries), Clerkenwell (a district of metal workers), Paternoster Row (the scene of the book trade) and Chancery Lane and Inns of Court (the domain of members of the legal profession)—all on the left or W bank of the river. South-west and Lambeth (with numerous potteries, glass-works, and breweries), Bermondsey (celebrated for its tanneries and wool warehouses), Rotherhithe (inhabited by shipping men), Deptford (a great cattle-mart), Greenwich (with its renowned observatory and Greenwich Hospital no longer used as an asylum) and Woolwich (with its royal arsenal, the Military Academy and dock yards)—all on the right bank of the Thames. Adjoining the metropolitan district on the E, at the N side of the Thames, is the great manufacturing quarter (a county borough in itself) called West Ham. T the E of this is East Ham and a little beyond is Barking. Among the southern suburban quarters, proceeding from W to E, are Putney, Wimbledon, Tooting, Streatham, Croydon, Norwood, Dulwich, Sydenham (near which is the Crystal Palace), Bromley, and Chislehurst. In the northern suburban section are Highgate, Harnsey and Tottenham. Among the places situated on the tortuous Thames immediately above the metropolis are Brentford, Richmond, Twickenham, and Kingston, near which last is Hampton Court. In the north-western outskirts of London is Harrow on the Hill. The Thames is crossed by numerous bridges among which the most noted are the London Bridge, connecting the City with Southwark, replacing the older bridge that was removed in 1832 and measuring 926 feet in length, the Waterloo Bridge, one of the finest bridges in the world measuring 1380 ft. in length, Westminster Bridge, 1160 ft. in length, Blackfriars Bridge and the Tower Bridge, opened in 1894 with a footway 143 ft. above high-water to be used when the regular highway is raised for the passage of vessels. The famous Thames Tunnel, which unites Wapping with Rotherhithe, was completed in 1843 and is 1200 ft. in length. The Blackwall Tunnel opened in 1897 connects Blackwell with East Greenwich and has a length of 4470 ft. and with the open approaches of 6210 ft. There are several other tunnels constructed or in course of construction.

Of the comparatively recent and most important improvements of the metropolis are the Thames embankments—the Victoria Embankment between Westminster and Millers Bridge, on the N side of the Thames, constructed in 1864-70 and measuring 1½ miles in length, the Albert Embankment, on the opposite side of the river, between Westminster and Vauxhall bridge and completed in 1869, and the Chelsea Embankment, opened in 1873. London is well supplied with squares, gardens and parks, many of which are adorned with imposing monuments. Among the most noted of these are Trafalgar Square, immediately adjoining Charing Cross, embellished with a granite column 145 feet in height erected to the memory of Nelson, Waterloo Place, with the Crimean monument, Berkeley Square, Cavendish Square, and Russell Square. Lincoln's Inn Fields surrounded by lawyers' offices, St. James's Park adjoining the royal residence, Buckingham Palace (on the site of the older Buckingham House), Hyde Park covering 350 acres, one of the centres of life of the metropolis, and during the season the rendezvous of fashion and elegance, the Kensington Gardens, covering 260 acres, and noted for their exquisite expanses of turf. Regent's Park embracing 4½ acres, and containing the fine zoological gardens, among the best cared for gardens of their class in the world. Letterman Park, on the E side of the Thames and Victoria Park at the E end covering 21½ acres.

The streets that most intimately reflect the life, growth and history of the metropolis are Pall Mall, a street of palaces and the centre of high life containing the Marlborough House, residence of the Prince of Wales; Piccadilly on which is the Burlington House, the home of the Royal Academy of Arts, the Royal Society and various other scientific associations, Regent Street, containing a large number of the finest shops of the city, St. Strand one of the busiest thoroughfares connecting the centre of the city with the West End, Fleet Street, a continuation of the Strand, also remarkable for its booksellers, Whitehall, Chancery, a street lined with handsome shops and rich in historical associations, Lombard Street the most noted street for banking and finance, Cornhill, Oxford Street the main artery of traffic between the NW quarter and the City, High Holborn one of the streets that survived the great fire of 1666 of which the Holborn Viaduct, bridging a deep depression is a continuation, and Chancery Lane, traversing the quarter occupied by members of the legal profession.

No city of the world, with the exception of Paris, has so many structures and institutions of historical literary scientific, and artistic moment or importance as London. Foremost among these are St. Paul's Cathedral designed by Sir Christopher Wren, erected in 1676-1710 and measuring 346 feet in length and 384 feet in height to the top of the cross on its vast dome. Westminster Abbey the Walhalla of the English nation dating in its present form (in part) from the latter half of the thirteenth century, and measuring 513 feet in length one of the most famous churches of the world, the House of Parliament, a vast Gothic pile dating from 1346, which extends along the left bank of the Thames for a distance of 940 feet and whose square Victoria Tower is 346 feet high, the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor, the Guildhall or Council Hall of the City, the Royal Courts of Justice, a magnificent Gothic edifice with a frontage of 500 feet, opened in 1832, Lambeth Palace, the seat of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the British Museum with a vast collection of Egyptian, Assyrian, Greek and Roman antiquities, the famous Elgin Marbles, British prehistoric remains, an unrivalled collection of original drawings, engravings, and etchings, and a library of upward of 3 000 000 volumes; the Natural History Museum containing the natural history collections properly belonging to the British Museum and occupying a building (erected in 1873-80) the largest in the world devoted to collections of its class; the South Kensington Museum (or Victoria and Albert Museum) containing magnificent collections of ornamental or applied art, Oriental and other collections, the National Art Library, etc.; the National Gallery one of the great galleries of painting in the world; the Bank of England (the only bank in London issuing paper money) founded in 1694, and occupying a building which covers about 4 acres,—a huge but dreary edifice, in whose vaults are usually housed 20 million pounds sterling in gold and silver; Christ's Hospital which until recently housed a famous school for boys (Bluecoat Boys) and girls (now at Farnham Common) founded in 1553; the Charterhouse, an asylum for poor old men and until recently also the seat of a celebrated grammar school, now located at Godalming; Surrey St. Bartholomew's Hospital (1 mile in 12) and the Tower (dating back to William the Conqueror); the latterly the most interesting structure of old England,—at first a royal palace and a stronghold, and afterwards a gloomy dungeon or state prison of London and now containing the crown jewels and a large collection of old armor. The most famous monument of the city is the Albert Memorial erected to the memory of Albert, Prince Consort, and adorned with reliefs in marble of 178 figures.

London stands pre-eminent in the number of its higher institutions of learning, its associations for the cultivation of the arts and sciences, and its special technical schools. In this class may be enumerated the University of London founded as an examining body in 1328 and reorganized in 1900-1901 into a body which in addition to its examining functions has control of the higher education in the metropolis; the principal institutions including most of the medical schools, being subject to it. University College, opened in 1828; King's College, opened in 1531; Royal College of Science founded as the Royal School of Mines in association with the Geological Survey of Great Britain; Central Technical College; Grosvenor College; St. Bartholomew's Hospital and College; London Hospital Medical College; Guy's Hospital Medical School; Royal College of Surgeons (one of the famous Hunterian Museums); Royal College of Music; the schools of art of the Royal Academy and South Kensington Museum; the Inns of Court; Imperial Institute of the United Kingdom (the Colonies and India with a large building erected in 1873-83); Royal Institution; British Academy (founded in 1901); British Association for the Advancement of Science; Institute of Architects; Institution of Civil and Mechanical Engineers; Royal Geographical Society; Royal Astronomical Society; the Geological, Botanical, Linnæan, and Astronomical Societies; the Chemical and Physical Societies; the Society of British Artists; the Society of Painters in Water Colors; the Society of Arts, etc. The theatres and music-halls embrace the Royal Albert Hall, a vast amphitheatre, constructed in 1867-71 and having a seating capacity of 8000; Covent Garden Theatre or Royal Italian Opera, with accommodation for 3500 persons; Drury Lane Theatre, Haymarket Theatre, etc. It is estimated that the theatres and music halls (of which latter there are about 500) are visited by 325 000 people nightly. There are about 600 newspapers published in London and its immediate environs.

The manufacturing industries of London are on a vast scale, and embrace an immense range of products. There were engaged in the manufacture of clothing and wearing apparel in 1901 303 000 men and women; the construction of machinery employed 53 791 persons; the manufacture of furniture 50 000 of chemicals, 25 433 glassware 8700. Other important manufactures are those of silk, very refined sugar, paper, carpets, surgical optical, and mathematical instruments, cutlery, watches and jewelry, hats, boots and shoes, tobacco, malted and other liquors, etc. London is the greatest commercial and financial centre and the foremost port in the world. The city commands one-third of the imports of the United Kingdom. The value of the imports in 1900 was £175,000 000 of which South African and Australian wool made up £17 000 000 grain £12,000 000 tea, £10 000 000 and sugar £8 000 000. The exports in the same year amounted to £31 502 000 of which home-manufactured cottons were valued at £5 500 000 clothing at £3 000 000 woollens (including carpets and yarns) at £4,000 000 and iron-manufactures at £5,000 000. The merchant marine, which is only second to that of Liverpool, consisted, in 1901 of 1730 steamers and 1299 sailing vessels, together registering 1 718 816 tons. The docks of the Port of London, with which are associated vast warehouses, magazines, and cellars for storage, packing, loading, etc. are the property of private joint-stock companies. They are the London Docks constructed in 1800 and covering 100 acres; the St. Katharine Docks, covering 23 acres; the Surrey Commercial Docks, covering about 350 acres; the West India Docks; the East India Docks; the Millwall Docks covering 100 acres; and the Royal Victoria and Albert Docks, covering 600 acres (of which 180 are water) and measuring 22 miles in length.

London is supplied with a vast network of surface railroads (in addition to a host of omnibuses and cabs) and with underground railways known as the Metropolitan and Metropolitan District Railways, besides several lines of underground electric railway recently constructed. The chief railroad lines of England have terminal stations within the city with offices, hotels, etc. constituting some of the largest buildings of the city (Charing Cross, Paddington, Euston Square, St. Pancras, King's Cross, Marylebone, Liverpool Street, Waterloo Victoria, etc. stations).

The population of the parliamentary boroughs of London in 1901 was 4 538,541 of which number 28 923 belonged to the City of London or City proper. Of the total population there were about 200 000 of Irish descent, 123 000 Scotch, 110 000 Poles and Russians (mostly Jews), 80 000 Germans, 26 000 French and Belgians and 20 000 Americans and Canadians. Three-quarters of the population belong to the Anglican church. The population of the Metropolitan and City of London Police Districts, or of what is known as Greater London in 1901 was 5 680 818. The average annual temperature is 50.5°; the temperature of summer 62°; temperature of winter 39°. Mean annual rainfall, 23.0 inches.

London was a busy trading place under the Romans by whom it was named with a wall. The city asserted its importance in Anglo-Saxon times. About the beginning of the seventh century when it was included in the realm of the East Saxons, it was made the seat of a bishop. It grew in prominence in the time of the wars with the Danes, to whom its sturdy inhabitants offered heroic resistance, and finally became the capital of Saxon England. William the Conqueror gave London a charter. The city flourished under the Plantagenets. The expansion of England under the Tudors and Stuarts gave a great impetus to the growth of London which in the seventeenth century overtook Paris in population. It was visited by the plague in 1665 and in the following year a conflagration (the Great Fire) destroyed about 10 000 houses. The new London that rose from the ashes exhibited a great architectural transformation. A large array of splendid edifices testified to the genius of Christopher Wren. The census of 1801 gave London a population of 864 000 far exceeding that of any city in Christendom. By 1841 the figure had more than doubled through natural increase and the absorption of circumjacent towns and parishes. In 1851 the year in which the first international exposition (World's Fair) was held in Hyde Park London counted 2 352 000 inhabitants. In the next half century the population doubled.

Lorraine, a region comprising about 9000 sq m. belonging about three-fourths to France and one-fourth to Germany. It constituted one of the administrative divisions or provinces of the French monarchy at the time of the Revolution under the official title of Lorraine-et-Barrois. French Lorraine is included in the departments of Meuse (capital, Verdun), Meurthe-et-Moselle (capital, Nancy) and Vosges (capital, Epinal). The part belonging to Germany constitutes the district of Lorraine (Lotharingen) in the Reichsland (imperial territory) of Alsace-Lorraine (capital, Metz). The province of Lorraine-et-Barrois, created only a quarter of a century before the Revolution (when it was divided up into departments) was formed out of the old duchy of Lorraine the duchy of Bar the bishoprics of Toul, Metz and Verdun French Luxembourg (Thionville now Diedenhofen Montmédy Longwy) the duchy of Bouillon, and German Lorraine (district watered by the Saar). The name Lorraine is from the Latin Lotharingia (Ger Lotharingen) a designation which in its original form (Lotharii Regnum, i. e. the Kingdom of Lothair) was given to the country inherited in 846 by Lothair II, the great-grandson of Charles the Great. This realm, a fragment of this mighty Frankish empire, embraced an extensive region between the Rhine on the R. and the Meuse and Scheldt on the W. and reaching from the head-waters of the Saône to the North Sea. This state soon disappeared but the name was revived. At the time of the establishment of the Holy Roman Empire of the German nation in the tenth century there were two Lotharingen duchies included in it,—Upper Lorraine and Lower Lorraine. These became gradually disintegrated. About the close of the twelfth century the name of Brabant supplanted that of Lower Lorraine, and Upper Lorraine became simply Lorraine, a name which thus came to designate a very small region by the side of the original Lotharingen. The dukes of Lorraine whose capital was Nancy, continued to rule as members of the Germanic body (though the connection with the empire was at the end very loose) down to 1766, when on the death of Stanislas Leszczyński ex king of Poland, the duchy passed in virtue of the treaties of Vienna of 1735 and 1738 to France. The Lotharingen bishoprics of Toul, Metz, and Verdun had been severed from the German Empire and annexed to France in 1552. In 1871 France was compelled to cede German Lorraine and Metz (with its district) to Germany.

Louisa, (loc-as-se-4d) Archipelago, an extensive group of islands, belonging to British New Guinea in the Pacific Ocean, comprised between the parallels of 10° 40' and 11° 40' S lat. and the meridians of 151° and 154° 30' E lon. The principal islands are Bougainville, the main island, Pagan, and St. Ignace. There are mountain elevations rising to 2800 and 3400 feet. The islands are composed of ancient rocks and some gold has been found and worked. They are inhabited chiefly by savage Papuans.

Louisiana, one of the Gulf States of the American Union, is bounded N by Arkansas and Mississippi, E by Mississippi and the Gulf of Mexico S by the Gulf of Mexico, and W by Texas. On the N it is limited partly by the 31st and partly by the 33d parallel of N lat. The rivers Mississippi and Pearl wash its eastern borders, and the Sabine forms the greater part of the western boundary. Area of the land-surface, 46,420 sq m. of the adjoining waters, about 3300 sq m.

Face of the Country.—There are few peaks in the state the elevation of which above sea-level much exceeds 200-250 feet (elevation of New Orleans, 363 ft.). In the central and northern sections there are extensive tracts of undulating or even hilly ground. Farther southward the country is more level with extensive forests and swamps, and in the SW there are wide grassy prairies. The great delta of the Mississippi is largely made up of swamp-lands slightly elevated above the sea-level and subject to occasional overflow and erode the habitable and cultivable lands are only measurably protected from the freshets of the Mississippi through the system of dikes and levees that have been constructed at a great expense for the restraint of the river within its banks. The marshy portions of the state are in many parts traversed by bayous or elevated dry ridges which are very generally inhabited. Most of the bayous which formerly flowed out from the Mississippi and made the southern part of the state a true delta have been cut off from their connection with the parent stream by the levees. The Great Pine Belt enters Louisiana from southern Mississippi, and with some interruptions, extends westward across the state, terminating in eastern Texas. On the W and NW of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi extends a low but precipitous range of sandstone hills.

Rivers, etc.—The state has a copious water-supply and the number of rivers, creeks, bayous, lakes and sloughs is very large. The principal river after the Mississippi is its affluent the Red River which traverses the northern half of the state. Steam navigation is carried on upon the Mississippi and Red rivers, the Atchafalaya, Ouachita, Teche, Sabine, and several smaller rivers and bayous. Lakes Pontchartrain and Borgne afford steamboat communication with Mobile on the almost landlocked Mississippi Sound. There are required in this state for the Mississippi alone several hundred miles of levees, the entire W bank being protected by these constructions.

Geology.—Nearly the whole of the state belongs to the Tertiary and Post-Tertiary formations, with the strata dipping generally in the direction of the Gulf and overlying the normal Cretaceous deposits of the Gulf slope. The area of the Mississippi delta itself covers hardly less than one-third that of the entire state and the deposits which compose it are many hundred feet deep. The mineral resources of the state are unimportant but there are extensive deposits of rock-salt, iron and iron-ore, petroleum, gypsum, sulphur and lignite, besides fertilizing marls.

Climate, Flora and Fauna.—A large part of the state enjoys a semi-tropical climate the average January temperature in the delta region being about 50°. Frosts are not infrequent in the N and they are at times destructive to agricultural products. The average annual rainfall is 50-60 inches. Pines and oaks (including the live-oak) of several kinds, cypresses, black and sweet-gum, several magnolias, hickory, cotton-bolls, are, cotton-wood, honey, yellow and black locust, several elms, ash, plane, and numbers of other useful timber trees abound in many sections of the state. The abundant native cane is utilized as a material for paper-making and the Tillandsia or Spanish moss which drapes the forest trees affords a substitute for the horsehair employed by upholsterers. The lynx rousseau spumosa deer, and other game animals, and at rare intervals the black bear and the panther or American lion, are still met with in certain parts. Many species of birds make this state their winter home. Venomous and other serpents and large alligators are found in the swamps, especially southward.

Agricultural Resources.—The inexhaustible fertility of the soil of a very large portion of this state must always render it attractive to the agriculturist. This is the only state where the culture of the true sugar-cane has proved remunerative upon a large scale. The production of cane-sugar in the year 1899-1900 amounted to 132,660 long tons. The quantity of molasses produced in 1899-00 was 24,953,168 gallons or nearly five times that produced by all the other southern states collectively. There were 1,378,254 acres in 1900 given over to the cultivation of cotton the average yield of which was 234 pounds of lint cotton per acre. 276,960 acres to the cultivation of the cane, 201,683 acres to rice and 1,343,756 acres to corn. In 1899-1900 the cotton crop was 899,476 bales. The other main agricultural crops were for the year 1900. Corn 24,702,598 bushels, oats 614,142 bushels, potatoes, 539,639 bushels and hay 64,662 tons. Market-gardening and horticulture are profitable occupations near New Orleans.

The chief manufacturing industries of the state are the manufacture of sugar and molasses. Lumber and forest products (including naval stores such as oil of turpentine, rosin and tar) are obtained in the pine woods. The shipments of yellow pine in the year 1900 amounted to about 384,089 000 feet. Cotton-seed oil, oil-oaks, and the oils of the piñaz, gopher or ground-nut, and castor-bean are valuable materials. The tobacco industry of the state has acquired considerable importance. In 1899 there were registered 200 cigar and tobacco factories, whose combined output was 46,337,956 cigars 45,472,160 cigarettes, and 1,052,154 pounds of tobacco.

Commerce and Railroads.—New Orleans is the principal seaport on the southern coast of the United States and is connected by steamship lines with the ports of the Old World. The number of ship arrivals at this port in 1900 was 1230; the clearances, 1187 the combined tonnage being 2,365,442. Railroads have not been constructed in Louisiana on a scale of such magnitude as in most of the other states, because her rivers have all along furnished ready and cheap communication. In 1846 there were 40 miles of railroad in 1850 90 miles in 1855 203 miles in 1860 335 miles in 1870 470 miles in 1890 1750 miles; and in 1900, 2833 miles.

Parishes.—Louisiana is divided into 69 parishes, corresponding to the counties of the other states via Acadie, Assumption, Assumption, Arroyales, Iberville, Bossier, Cadeo, Calcasieu, Caldwell, Cameron, Catahoula, Claiborne, Concordia, De Soto, East Baton Rouge, East Carroll, East Feliciana, Franklin, Grant, Iberia, Iberville, Jackson, Jefferson, Lafayette, Lafourche, Lincoln, Livingston, Madison, Morehouse, Natchitoches, Orleans, Ouachita, Plaquemine, Pointe Coupee, Rapides, Red River, Richland, Sabine, St. Bernard, St. Charles, St. Helena, St. James, St. John Baptist, St. Landry, St. Martin, St. Mary, St. Tammany, Tangipahoa, Tensas, Terrebonne, Union, Vermilion, Vernon, Washington, Webster, West Baton Rouge, West Calcasieu, West Feliciana, Winn.

Cities and Towns.—The principal are New Orleans, the metropolis of the Gulf States (pop. in 1900 287,104). Shreveport, the commercial centre of northwestern Louisiana (pop. 16,613). Baton Rouge, the state capital (pop. 11,266). Other places of note are New Iberia (p.p. 6315), Lake Charles (pop. 6680), Alexandria (pop. 5648), Monroe (pop. 5428), Crowley, Donaldsonville, Plaquemine, Houma and Morgan City.

Education.—Normal school instruction is provided at the state normal school at Natchitoches, at the New Orleans normal school and in some of the colleges and private schools. New Orleans is the seat of Tulane University which takes first rank in the educational institutions of the state, of New Orleans University, Southern University and Straight University. The state university and agricultural and mechanical college is at Baton Rouge. Industrial colleges are located at Ruston and Lafayette. There are in the state several colleges of the liberal arts, with a number of professional schools and colleges for women.

Government.—The present constitution of the state was adopted in May 1898. The governor together with the principal officers, and the members of both houses of the legislature, are elected for a term of four years. Louisiana is represented by 7 members in the Federal Congress.

History.—The region constituting Louisiana was traversed by the followers of De Soto in 1542. In 1682 the French explorer La Salle descended the Mississippi and took possession of its valley naming the region Louisiana, in honor of Louis XIV. In 1699 a French colony was founded by Iberville at Delcôt, on the coast of what is now Mississippi. Other settlements were made soon after, among them one at Mobile, in what is now Alabama. In 1717 the Scottish financier and adventurer John Law secured from the French government for his Compagnie d'Occident the right to exploit the region about the Mississippi and in the following year New Orleans was founded. Law's schemes for the development of Louisiana bore little fruit. In 1763 the region became a crown colony. Louisiana was transferred to Spain in 1763 was retroceded to France in 1800 and in 1803 the whole province was purchased by President Jefferson for the United States. This purchase included nearly all the present territory of the United States between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains, exclusive of Texas and the eastern part of New Mexico. It did not include that part of the present state of Louisiana which has the Pearl River on the E, the Mississippi River on the W., and the rivers Iberville and Atchafalaya and lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain on the S; for this tract was a portion of the Spanish province of West Florida, and although it was ceded by act of Congress in 1812 to Louisiana, it was not definitively United States territory until after the Florida purchase of 1819. In 1804 the Territory of Orleans was constituted with nearly the present limits of the state, and in 1812 the state of Louisiana was admitted to the Union. The state seceded from the Union in 1861. The work of reconstruction was completed in 1868.

Luzon, (Sp. pron. loo'zon) an island belonging to the United States in the Malay Archipelago, according to official Spanish data the largest of the Philippine Islands between the China Sea on the W and the North Pacific Ocean on the E and between lat. 15° 30' and 18° 38' N (Cape Bojeador) and lon. 119° 43' and 124° 10' E. It is the northernmost of the large islands of the group and is separated by narrow channels from Mindoro and Samar Areas, about 44,400 sq. m. including various outlying islands. It is very irregular in shape, an elongated and deeply indented peninsula stretching out in the SE and connected with the main body of the island by a isthmus only about 5 miles across in its narrowest part. The surface is very diversified, the Caraballo mountains being the principal chain. It is divided into several branches, the chief of which are Caraballo (or Cordillera Occidental) Caraballo Central (or del Norte) in the NW portion Caraballo da Balat (or Cordillera Oriental or Sierra Madre) along the E coast from the centre to the NE point and a branch running towards the S into the SE. portion. Many disastrous eruptions have taken place. The mountain of Data in the Caraballo Central is, after Mayón, seemingly the loftiest summit of the island. Granite and other crystalline rocks enter largely into the construction of the northern mountains. The hydrographic system includes six chief rivers, with numerous other streams and several lakes. The Rio Grande de Cagayan is the longest river. It has a northerly course of about 300 miles, emptying into the China Sea. The other rivers are the Agno Grande, Abra, Rio Grande de la Pampanga, Vico (or Bolo) and Pasig which last overflows by several mouths from Laguna de Bay into Manila Bay passing through Manila. The lakes include Laguna de Bay, Bombon, Cagayan, etc. The vegetation of Luzon is exceedingly luxuriant. Dense forests crown the loftiest heights and rich verdure and abundant cultivated crops cover the plains and valleys. Among the crops are rice, the chief article of food, sugar-cane which is extensively grown abroad, or manila hemp, various species of palm cotton, coffee, cinchona, maize, and tobacco. The minerals include gold, iron, copper, coal, sulphur, marble, gypsum, agates, jaspers, and carnelians, some of which (including gold) are mined. Cotton and silk tissues, cordage, tobacco, plain and varnished leather, embroidery, wood and ivory carvings, mats, carriages, etc. are manufactured, and boats, canoes, and large vessels are built. LYONNAIS, lee de na an old province of France, now included in the departments of Rhône and Loire. Capital Lyons

LYONS, li ons (Fr Lyons lee on' and Lugdunum) the third city in population and second in industrial importance of France a fortress of the first class, capital of the department of Rhône and seat of an archbishop, 250 miles (direct) ESE of Paris and 160 miles N of the Medi-terranean lat. of observatory 45° 40' 40" N lon 4° 47' 40" E. It is situated at the confluence of the Rhône, flow-ing from the N and the Rhône, coming from the E, and the main part of the city is built on the tongue of land formed by the two rivers although it extends to the oppo-site banks of both streams, the communication being main-tained by many bridges. On the right bank of the Rhône the hills rise in the form of an amphitheatre and are par-tially occupied by streets. From the hill of Fourvière a grand panorama is presented to the eye embracing distinct views of the Alps on the E. and the Cévennes on the S. The city is of striking appearance, and its modernization has given it many fine quarters, among which may be men-tioned the magnificent quay: flanking the river for several miles the open squares and promenades (Place Carnot, Place Bellecour the fashionable city centre Place des Ter-reaux) many of them adorned with monumental sculp-tures the stately Rue de la République and Rue de l'Hôtel de Ville and the Parc de la Tête-d'Or embracing 250 acres and containing zoological and botanical gardens and an ob-servatory

Several of the public edifices of Lyons are remarkable for their antiquity as well as for the beauty of their architec-ture. The cathedral of St. Jean on the slope of the Four-vière is in the Gothic style of the time of Louis XI and is one of the most interesting churches of France. Higher up the acclivity stands the church of Notre Dame de Four-vière, in modernized Byzantine style, which was conse-crated in 1896. Among the other ecclesiastical structures are the church of St. Nizier (the ancient cathedral) and the church of Ainay the oldest in Lyons portions of whose orig-inal structure of the sixth century—columns from a Roman temple that entered into its construction—still survive. The archiepiscopal palace situated near the cathedral is a large edifice. In the Place des Terreaux stands the Hôtel de Ville, one of the finest edifices of the kind in France, though very irregular in its style.

The municipal library is the best provincial collection in France. It contains 200 006 volumes and has besides a rich collection of 1888. The Palais St. Pierre (or des Arts), facing the Place des Terrenes, occupies the ancient convent of St. Pierre, which is a fine, majestic edifice. It contains galleries of paintings and sculptures, a cabinet of medals and antiquities, natural history collections, and a library. The chief educational institutions are the university (having in 1904, 3600 students) the academy the lycée (or college) medical school and school of pharmacy school of fine arts schools of industrial art (École de la Martinière) and forestry etc. The Bourse is one of the most striking buildings of the city. It contains a museum of the textile industry. The Palais de Justice and the building of the prefecture, erected in 1880-90 are notable edifices. The most important charitable establishments are the Hôtel-Dieu (hospital) the Maison de la Charité (a very extensive almshouse) the Mont de Piété and the Hospice de l'Antiquaille.

As a manufacturing town Lyons early acquired a high rank. Its silk manufactures are the most important in the world. This constitutes its great specialty and employs 85 000 looms in the city and its near neighborhood, besides 25 000 others in the adjoining departments. The silk industry with its allied industries, gives employment to and near Lyons to over 200 000 hands. The annual exports of pure silk amount to $30 000 000 and of manufactured articles (articles of apparel umbrellas etc.) to $30 000 000. Lyons has also manufactures of hats books, jewelry paper machinery perfumes, Jacquard looms, shoelace hardware, bristles, soap candles, shawls lace, and liquors, besides dye-works, foundries glass works, pottery, tanneries, breweries, and chemical works. The city is admirably situated for trade and is a great entrepôt both for the N and the S. As a financial centre it occupies the leading place in France after Paris.

History.—When Caesar invaded Gaul, Lyons (Lugdunum) was already a place of importance. It became the principal Roman colony in Gaul and gave its name to one of the divisions of the country Gallia Lugdunensis. Several emperors made it their occasional residence vying with one another in adorning it. It was the birthplace of Claudius, Marcus Aurelius, and Crispinus. Various Roman remains exist. Lyons early received Christianity and at the end of the second century when it was already the seat of a bishop contained thousands of Christians. Many of its noblest Roman structures disappeared in the invasions of the barbarians. In the Middle Ages the counts of Lyons and of Forez held sway for a time in the city and subsequently it was ruled by a succession of archbishops. From the fourteenth century it was under the direct sway of the French kings. Louis XIV did much for Lyons by the construction of quays and the erection of beautiful edifices. In 1793 the troops of the Convention perpetrated wholesale butcheries in the city which had taken up arms against the Reign of Terror. Pop. in 1852 156 108 in 1901 459 099.

Macedonia, ma-se-do-ne-ja, in ancient geography a country lying N of Greece, between Illyria on the W and Thracia on the E and bordering on the Aegean Sea. It later included the peninsula of Chalcidice. Among the cities inclusive of those in Chalcidice, were Pella (the capital) Pydna, Thessalonica (Therma) Philippi Amphipolis, Potidia (Casandria), and Gynethos. On the border of Thessaly was Mount Olympus. Macedonia became powerful under Philip (father of Alexander the Great) whose victory at Chorosce, in 333 B.C. secured to him the overlordship of Greece. Alexander conquered the vast Persian Empire, 334-337 B.C. and then built up a mighty Macedonian realm in three continents, extending from the Adriatic in India, and embracing Egypt. It fell to pieces on his death in 323 B.C. and Macedonia became again a kingdom by itself Greece remaining partially subject to it for a time. Not long after the overthrow of King Persius in 168 B.C. Macedonia became a Roman province. The Macedonians have not usually been regarded as true Greeks (their country was not included in Hellas) but their language has been shown to have been a Greek tongue. The name Macedonia has been revived as a modern designation. The region is now a part of Turkey and embraces a perfect medley of peoples the chief elements being Slavs, Osmanlis, and Greeks. A large fraction of the Slavs (Bulgarians and Serbs) are Mohammedans.

Madagascar, mād-gā-lār a great island and French colony in the Indian Ocean lying on the E coast of Africa, and forming it is thought, part of a land mass (Lemuria of some naturalists) which at a recent geological period united that continent with the Indian peninsula. It extends from Capa Amber its west N point lat 11° 57' S to Capa St Mary its most S point, lat. 25° 35' S a distance of 975 miles The greatest breadth hardly exceeds 350 miles Area, estimated at 230 000 sq m The Strait of Mozambique which separates Madagascar from the African coast, is at its narrowest point about 240 miles in width

A tract of elevated land rising by successive terraces, extends N and S throughout the island The N half assumes a mountainous character It is only at the SE extremity of the island that the high land reaches the sea everywhere else the coast is bordered by a broad strip of level land. This tract of low land here on the E end of Madagascar a width varying from 20 to 50 miles on the W it is double that extent it is overgrown with marshes which breed malignant fevers The central table-land is supposed to lie from 3000 to 5000 feet above sea-level and is largely in the form of steppes or prairie, in greater part destitute of trees and carved up into castellated forms pyramids and spires. The highest elevation of the land appears to be in the Ankaratra mountains, in the east-central part of the island, and is probably in part, of volcanic origin, elevation 8860 feet. The rugged character of the country is such as to have allowed it to remain without roads. The central plateau is in great part surrounded by a belt of thick forest which reaches down to the maritime plains and in a few places extends even to the sea-shore.

The rivers of Madagascar are very numerous but few of them are available, even to a moderate extent, for the purposes of navigation They fall rapidly from the high land of the interior and then spread into lakes in the low maritime regions, reaching the sea-shore with slow currents, so that their mouths particularly on the W coast, are barred. On the NW side of the island, where the elevated coast is broken into inlets and deep bays, the rivers are often accessible and navigable in boats for some distance. The largest of these rivers is the Betanoka, which falls into the Bay of Bombetoka in about lat. 18° S. Boats can ascend it for a distance of 160 miles. Other streams are the Mangoka, Onilaky and Tziribihina.

The prevailing rocks are granite, gneiss, and pure quartz, with abundant volcanic masses and a long series of stratified rocks, which probably compose the subordinated ridges, or nearly all beyond the central heights. Iron is abundant, the chief deposits lying in the neighborhood of the volcanic rocks. Among other minerals are gold (found principally in the basin of the Betaluka) lead copper manganese, plumbago rock-salt (an important article of inland trade), nitre, and sulphur and there are also large lignite (coal) deposits. The value of the gold export in 1901 was about $350,000.

Climate, Flora, and Fauna.—The heat on the coasts is often intense, but on the highlands of Ankova and elsewhere the thermometer rarely rises above 85°, and in the winter it often sinks to 40° (even lower on the Ankaratra mountains) and is often very frequent. On the coasts the rains are nearly constant beginning in the evening and lasting sometimes all night. In the interior there is a hot and rainy season comprising the months November–April and a cool and dry season embracing the balance of the year. The average annual rainfall at Tananarivo is 63 inches at Tamatave, 90–100 inches. The average mean temperature at these two localities is 62° and 75° respectively.

Although the interior of Madagascar remains still largely unexplored by botanists, enough is known of the vegetable productions of the island to attest their richness and variety. The most important trees are the baobab (Adansonia) the ravenala (Uruba speciosa), filao (Cuscuta equisetifolia) raphia palm ambavavai (Topia edulis) feeding the native silk-worm areas, pandanus acacia, yielding a gum greatly valued as a cement, ebony and ravintsara (Agathophyllum urticatum), which produces a highly fragrant spice besides these there are numerous dyo-woods varieties of Indian fig tamarind trees and shrubs yielding gum elastic, copal and other gums, and the sosoro or papyrus, peculiar to the island. Cigoe, pepper and indigo grow wild in the woods cotton coffee, cacao, sugar-cane, tobacco, and hemp are cultivated. Except in the NW and W where the Sakalavae subsist chiefly on arrow root, the principal food of the Malagases is rice. The coconut (on the coast) the plantain and banana, yams, manioc, maize, millet, beans potatoes etc. add to the general abundance. Besides the native fruits, the orange peach citron mulberry and even grapes introduced by Europeans, are now widely diffused over the island.

The fauna of Madagascar is of the African type, but is lacking almost entirely in the caninure and ungulate forms that belong to that continent and is distinguished by the number of genera and species that are peculiar to the island. This is the home, par excellence of the ungulate group of the lemurs, or half-apes, and it alone has the remarkable aye-aye. The only native predatory animal is the fox like Eupropithecus. The birds are as distinctive as the quadrupeds, a recently exterminated form is the giant Apornis, a struthious bird of nearly twice the height of the ostrich. Among fliers the chameleons are particularly numerous. Many domestic animals have been introduced. The horned cattle, in which chiefly consists the wealth of the Malagasy are of the humped kind, like those of India. There are, however, in the forests wild cattle which have no hump.

People, Government, History.—The bulk of the Malagases (Fr. Malgaches) or inhabitants of Madagascar are by no means African, the Malayan element predominating in their greatly mixed blood. The principal peoples are the Hovas (the dominant race, numbering about 550,000 who may be regarded as belonging to the Malayan stock) the Sakalavae (whose negro affinities are very pronounced) the Betalimarakas, Betalioes, Baras and Antankaras. There are on the coasts and in the large towns many people of Arab East Indian, and South descent. Of the Malagasy dialects, which belong to the Malayo-Polynesian group of languages, the most highly developed is that of the Hovas, in which books and newspapers have been printed. The administration of the colony is vested in a governor-general, assisted by an administrative council, whose seat is at Tananarivo which has a population of about 55,000. The chief port is Tamatave, on the E. coast the chief port on the NW is Majunga.

The Portuguese appear to have discovered Madagascar within two or three years after the doubling of the Cape of Good Hope by Vasco da Gama. In the course of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the colonial nations of Europe attempted to obtain a foothold on the island, but unsuccessfully. The principal effort was made by the French in the reign of Louis XIV, but their cruel treatment of the natives brought on failure. Early in the nineteenth century however the French were planted in a few places. Radama, the ruler from 1810 to 1828 of the powerful state of the Hovas, a prince who learned much on British soil established many reforms and instituted numerous improvements and opened his realm to British influence. He was poisoned, in 1828, by his queen, Ranaivalona, who in a short time united as far as possible all that he had accomplished. France assumed a protectorate over the island in 1830 but it was not officially recognized as a colony until 1894, after a war of occupation in the preceding year. Pop. in 1901 estimated at 2,500,23 of whom 18,544 were Europeans.

Madeira, má-dé-á (Port. pron má-dá-rá) an island in the Atlantic Ocean belonging to Portugal about 440 miles from the coast of Morocco, between lat. 32° 36' and 32° 55' N. and lon. 16° 40' and 17° 20' W. It is 55 miles long and 12 miles broad. It consists of a mass of volcanic rocks, whose highest peak the Pico Ruivo, reaches an elevation of 6060 feet. Through the W. half of the island runs a central ridge about 5000 ft. high, on which is an extensive plain called Paul da Serra, and from which steep ridges extend to the coast, where they form precipices 1000–2000 ft. high (Cabo Girao, 1935 ft.). These cliffs are interrupted by a few small bays which are the sites of the villages of Madeira. The Curral das Freixas near the centre of the island is a vast urno or amphitheatre, enclosed by the foot of the mountain summits (Ruivo, Cidrio, Canario, Torres). The road round the island is in many places exceedingly picturesque, passing often between lofty cliffs, or along the front of precipices overhanging the sea. The mountain-steeps of Madeira are clothed with a remarkably rich and luxuriant verdure. In the lower portions of the island groves of orange- and lemon-trees are mingled with the vineyards, higher up, bananas, figs, pomegranates, etc., are seen, and still higher apples, currants, pears, and peaches. Coffee and arrow-root, both of excellent quality are also grown. Wheat, barley, rye, and Indian corn are raised. The richest vine-district, and the part where grows the Malmsay grape, is the valley of the Oama da Lobos, on the S side of the island. Formerly its famous wine was the staple export of Madeira, but a disease of the vines for a time nearly suspended all wine-making. At present, however, considerable wine is produced, the annual shipments from the island amounting to between 5000 and 6000 pipes. The fauna of Madeira is a component of the faunas of Europe and northern Africa. Beyond possibly some rats and bats, there were at the time of the discovery of the island no mammals. The climate is very equable and is famed for its salubrity. The mean temperature at the level of the sea is 65° and the ordinary extremes 74° and 53°. The absolute maximum and minimum temperatures are 85° and 40°. The annual rainfall which is represented by about 90 days of precipitation is 24-30 inches. Snow is sometimes seen on the higher mountains. Madeira is much resorted to by invalids, particularly those suffering from pulmonary affections. Transportation is rendered slow and difficult by the steepness of the acclivities, and sleds drawn by oxen often handsomely fitted up take the place of wheeled vehicles. Capital Funchal. The language is Portuguese. Pop. in 1906 148,172.

The group of islands called the Madeira Islands (or Madeira Group) consists of the islands of Madeira and Porto Santo and the three islets called the Desertas in lat. 32° 2' to 33° 7' N lon. 16° 13' to 18° 38' W. They were discovered by the Portuguese in 1418. The name Madeira was given to the principal island from the magnificent forests of timber (in Portuguese, madeira) which then covered it. (See Desertas and Porto Santo.) The islands form a district of the kingdom of Portugal with an area of about 315 sq m.

Madefira, or Cayari, Hi-ree a river of Brazil is formed in the Bolivian frontier by the junction of the Beni and Mamoré in lat 16° 30' S. lon 65° 25' W. whence it flows NE 700 miles (in a direct line) and joins the Amazon (of which it is the largest tributary) in lat 3° 30' S. Including the Mamoré its principal branch which some consider as the true Madefira, it has a length of about 2000 miles, for nearly 1000 of which it is navigable. For about 550 miles from its mouth it is at all times navigable for vessels drawing 6 feet above tide, between lat. 8° 50' and 11° S. The navigation is interrupted by numerous cataracts, beyond which the river is again navigable for small steamboats for several hundred miles. Continuous navigation properly extends to Santo Antonio, at the foot of the rapids of the same name. In the lower 600 miles of its course the depth varies from 27 to 200 feet, and at its junction with the Amazon it has a width of nearly two miles. The Madefira derives its name from the great quantity of timber (woodra) or logs brought down by the periodical floods. See Wamooé.

Madras, a maritime city of British India capital of the province of Madras, on the Bay of Bengal (Coromandel Coast). Lat. of observatory $13^{\circ}4'8''$ N lon $80^{\circ}14'50''$ E. It is situated on an open shore, exposed to the heavy swell of the sea. Great breakwaters have been constructed to render the harbor more secure, and engineering works are still in progress. The commercial quarter of Madras is located in what is called the Black Town which is very closely and irregularly built on low ground. The public offices (court-house, admiralty building custom house) and business houses which line the beach are stately structures. South of the Black Town is the old Fort St. George, which may be considered the nucleus of the city. It is garrisoned by native and British troops. Here are the offices of the civil and military administration. St. Mary's Church, the oldest English church in India, government house cathedral of St. George, etc. South of Fort St. George is an island formed by the Cooum River which serves as a military parade ground. Beyond this to the S and W are thickly peopled residential quarters succeeded by suburban sections bearing native names. Back of the Black Town are also extensive suburbs. In the extreme S is the former Portuguese town of São Thomé. On the outskirts of the city are great tanks. The mansions of the Europeans are largely located in park like places called compounds. Madras has a number of handsome edifices, such as the Government House, St. George's cathedral, the Scottish church of St. Andrew, the university buildings, the new law courts, Panchasappa's Hall Memorial Hall and the Chepauk Palace. There is a large arsenal. Besides the university (an examining institution) Madras possesses Presidency College, schools of law medicine, agriculture, engineering and art, Victoria Technical Institute, a teachers college, the Madras Christian College, a botanical garden, a valuable museum physical observatory, etc. Madras is an Anglican bishop's see and São Thomé has a Roman Catholic bishop. There are a number of Christian churches. The city is supplied with water from reservoirs fed by the Corvelhar River. It has a large public park. Madras carries on an extensive commerce. It exports coffee, rice, cotton indigo, hides, etc. Its manufacturing industries are unimportant, except in the production of the well-known cotton Madras. There are dye-works tanneries, potteries, breweries, glass-works, etc.

The English began establishing themselves at Madras in 1639. It soon became their chief station on the Coromandel Coast. In 1746 it was taken by the French, who kept it until 1749 when the place was restored to the English. In the latter year São Thomé founded by the Portuguese as early as 1504, was annexed. In 1768-69 the place was successfully besieged by the French. Pop in 1901 600 397 nearly four-fifths Hindus one-eighth Mohammedans and nearly one-tenth Christians.

Madras, one of the great provinces of British India, formerly styled a presidency. It comprises the extreme southern part of the peninsula of India and the eastern part as far N nearly as the parallel of 21° N lat. together with a narrow strip extending northward along the W coast as far as the parallel of 14° . About the middle of the province there is a projection which extends W to within 100 miles of the Arabian Sea. Part of the coast-land on the Bay of Bengal is known as the Coromandel Coast and that on the Arabian Sea is part of the Malabar Coast. The province embraces the old Carnate (in the SE.) Madras borders on Bengal (Orissa) the Central Provinces Hyderabad, Mysore, and Bombay Area, exclusive of the native states, 141,728 sq m. Area of the native states 9969 sq m. These states are Travancore, Cochin, Pudukota Karul and Bellary. Pop of the province in 1901 exclusive of native states 38 209 426 of the native states, 4 188 968. A large part of Madras belong to the great South Indian interior plateau of the Deccan. This is flanked on the E. by the range of the Eastern Ghats, between which and the Bay of Bengal is the broad Coromandel lowland. Along the Malabar Coast extend the Western Ghats. In the S where the two ranges converge, are the Nilgiri Hills, forming a connecting link between them. The principal rivers of Madras are the Godavary and Krishna, with their tributaries and the Pennar Palur and Cavery and Coimboor (an arm of the Cavery). The rivers pour their waters into the Bay of Bengal. The principal crops are millet and rice, a great part of the artificially irrigated land which is very extensive, being devoted to the latter. Oil seeds cotton and pulse are extensively raised. Among other crops are sugar, indigo tobacco coffee, tea, and cinchona. There are extensive forests, yielding teak ebony and other valuable timber trees. Among the minerals are gold and diamonds. The bulk of the inhabitants belong to the Telugu and Tamil branches of the Dravidian (non Aryan) stock. The governor of Madras receives his appointment from the Crown. The seat of the administration is the city of Madras.

Madrid, ma-drid (Ep. pron. má-dreeen almost má-dreeen) the capital city of Spain and the seat of the captain general of New Castile. In a province of its own name on the Meseta, in the centre of the peninsula, lat. (observatory) $40^{\circ}24'29''$ N lon $3^{\circ}41'15''$ W. 2160 feet above sea-level. The city which is one of the finest capitals of Europe, is built on several low and irregular sand-hills and is surrounded by a barrow and extensive plain, which, except on the SW, has no visible limit but the horizon. The streets of the old town are narrow crooked, and dingy but the newer quarters which extend into the heart of the city are laid out in fine boulevards spacious squares, and promenades. The focal point of life and commerce is the Puerta del Sol one of the old gate-ways, and the principal place in Madrid. Other squares are the Plaza Mayor (or Plaza de la Constitución) containing the equestrian statue of Philip III. probably the finest monumental work of the capital and in which were for a long time conducted spectacular and other shows tournaments, and executions the Plaza de Oriente, with an equestrian statue of Philip IV, on one side of which is the royal theatre, accommodating 2400 persons, and on another the royal palace, a massive granite building 500 feet in length—containing a library of upward of 100,000 volumes and a rare collection of tapestries, the Plaza de la Independencia, surrounded by stately private edifices and the Plaza de Toros, occupied by the huge bull-ring which has a diameter of 335 feet and gives accommodation to 14,000 spectators. The most famous promenades, which are among the finest in Europe and exhibit the life of fashion and wealth of the capital in a way seen in but few miles are the Prado, the Paseo de Recoletos, and the Paseo de la Castellana, which are flanked by palatial residences and by some of the most renowned institutions of the city. Among these are the Museo del Prado, or national museum of paintings and sculptures, containing one of the finest collections of the world, especially rich in the treasures of the Spanish school of painting and particularly the works of Velasquez; the palace of the national library (with about 1,000,000 printed volumes) and of the museums of natural history, national ethnology and of modern art, the mint, and the Bank of Spain. Towards the eastern limits of the city is the Park of Madrid, formerly known as Buen Retiro, a pleasure ground of 266 acres adjoined on one side by the botanical garden. The gardens of the royal palace, known as the Campo del Moro, which were first laid out by Philip II in 1560 cover the space between the palace and the Manzanares River. Among the remaining notable institutions and buildings of Madrid are the Casa de Ayuntamiento (or city hall), the palace of the Cortes, exchange, naval museum, armory (with a world renowned collection of arms and armor founded by Charles V and placed in Madrid by Philip II), artillery museum and the royal stables. Foremost among the educational institutions is the university formerly at Alcalá de Henares but removed to Madrid in 1830. It contains a library of upward of 200,000 volumes. In 1900-01 its courses were attended by 5118 students. Madrid possesses schools of music, architecture and industrial arts, a royal observatory, a military institute, geographical and technical institute, and various other learned associations. Among the ecclesiastical buildings are the cathedral, the church of St. Francis the Great, partially modelled after the Pantheon at Rome and recognized as the national Pantheon, and the church of San Jerónimo.

Madrid has one of the worst climates of any city in Europe being visited by frequent cold and almost icy blasts sweeping off from the Sierra de Guadarrama, which have given rise to various forms of pulmonary and bronchial affections. Throughout many months of the year the range of temperature is within a few hours 35 degrees. The average annual temperature is 58°, with extremes in winter of 9° and in summer of 110°. The city is supplied with water from the Sierra de Guadarrama, from a locality Losoya, 43 miles distant. The chief industrial establishments are the manufactures of tobacco (National Tobacco Factory with upward of 2000 hands), carpets, tapestry, jewelry, leather, musical instruments, pottery, etc.

Mahrattas, mā-rā-tās, a people of mixed blood, speaking a Hind language, the Marathi who live in the western part of the peninsula of India, and whose number between 15,000,000 and 20,000,000. Their religion is Hinduism. They rose to great power under a prince named Shivaji in the second half of the seventeenth century at the expense of the Mogul Empire, to whom decline they greatly contributed. Before long the chief power in the Mahratta state was usurped by the prime-minister (or Peshwa). Early in the eighteenth century we find 5 Mahratta states, whose rulers for a time collectively held a dominant position in India—Baroda, Gwalior, Indore, Nagpur and the Peshwa's dominions (capital, Poona). In 1761 the power of the Mahrattas was shattered by the Afghans, and in the course of the next sixty years they succumbed to the British. The states under Mahratta rulers (vassals of the British) are at present Baroda, Gwalior and Indore.

Maine, an ancient province of France bounded N by Normandy E by Orléannais, and S by Anjou and Touraine. With Perche it constituted a general government. Its capital was La Mans. It is now included in the departments of Sarthe and Mayenne

Maine, one of the New England states and the northeasternmost state of the American Union bounded N by Quebec E by New Brunswick, S by the Atlantic Ocean, and W by New Hampshire and Quebec. Its NW boundary follows for some distance the crest of a range of low mountain, a parallel outlier of the Canadian Notre Dame range. Leaving this crest, the line follows the SW branch of the river St. John for some distance northward, and then takes a direct NE course to near lat. $47^{\circ} 30' N$ the most northerly portion of the eastern United States. Thence eastward the rivers St. Francis and St. John bound the state on the N. The eastern boundary ascends the river St. Croix to its source, and thence strikes directly N until the river St. John is reached. The coast of Maine (about 250 miles long in a direct line) is indented deeply by many bays and inlets, which increase the actual coast-line to a yard of 2000 miles and afford unrivalled harbor facilities for shipping. Off the coast there are numerous islands belonging to the state. Area of the land surface, 29 385 sq. m. of the appertaining waters about 3100 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The northern portion of the state consists largely of a wilderness of forest-land covered with pine, spruce, hemlock fir and deciduous trees of various species, the shade of the moss (or true elk) the black bear and various fur-bearing and game animals, and the resort of the trapper, the sportsman, and the lumberman. Until recently the primeval forest covered three-fourths of the state's area, but extensive lumbering has materially lessened the woodland thinned the forest into second and third growths and introduced extensive clearings, many of which have been put to agricultural uses. In the more largely forested sections the permanent inhabitants are few except in the A. R. where the fertile soil of Aroostook co. has attracted settlers and developed a hardy and prosperous class of farmers and mechanics. All parts of the state abound in beautiful lakes famed for their trout, pickerel, and pike. In the N and NW are groups of detached mountains, which belong to the Appalachian system and are in part more or less directly connected with the White Mountains of New Hampshire. Mount Katahdin, the highest peak in the state, situated in its north-central part, reaches an elevation of 5266 feet. Other noteworthy elevations are Mars Hill on the E. line Sugar Loaf on the river Schoodic Saddleback, Bigelow (3440 ft.) Bald, Kinsale (see Moosehead Lake 1768 ft.) Spooner, Abraham (3387 ft.) Calvee Menahan White Cap, and the Aroostook and Travellers' mountains. The southern half of the state is of varied character, solidus meek broken in surface, but with tracts of great fertility and others of small agricultural value, the latter found especially southward.

Rivers, Lakes, etc.—The Penobscot is the largest river and is navigable for ships except in winter to Bangor (10 miles from the sea) while its upper waters are navigable by small steamboats. Parallel with the lower course of the Penobscot is the Kennebec, which is navigable as far as Waterville, 68 miles from the sea. Various other rivers as well as lakes afford steam navigation. The Androscoggin, Sagadahoc, St. Croix, Aroostook, and Wolfscotook (or St. John) are important streams. The water power of the principal streams is constant and is extensively employed by manufacturers. Of the hundreds of lakes which are scattered over the greater part of the area of the state, and which are so the main of glacial origin, the principal or better known are Moosehead, Chasanceau, Sebasticus, Grand Rangely, Eagle, and Sebago. The fresh waters of Maine are estimated to cover one-tenth of its area.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—The waterfalls, mountains, wild forests, and countless lakes of Maine, with the cool summer climate of the north afford attractions to the tourists which are more and more widely appreciated every year and the charms of its bold and rocky sea-coast, with its thousand bays, its bold promontories, and its picturesque islands, are well known to artists. The fishing and hunting-grounds about Moosehead Lake, the grand solitudes of Mount Katahdin and the varied combinations of beauty and sublimity on the coast at Mount Desert Island (on which is the summer-resort of Bar Harbor) Kennebec port, and Casco Bay (on which is situated Portland) are especially noteworthy.

Geology, Mineral Resources.—Seemingly the greater part of the surface strata of Maine are of Archæan age, but Silurian rocks cover a large part of the N and NE with smaller areas in the SE and SW and elsewhere. Overlying the Silurian there are in places wide belts of Devonian strata. A vast section is covered with glacial drift or bears evidence of having undergone extensive glaciation. The mineral wealth of the state has so far been but imperfectly developed. Thomaston Rockland, Camden and other counties burn and export large quantities of lime of excellent quality and there is much good building stone. The granites of Hallowell Bath Rockland, Thomaston Dix Island Calais, and many other points have long been noted for their excellent or superior quality and have contributed materially to the resources of the state. Roofing-slates are found in abundance. The metallic minerals include iron (much of it magnetic) lead, zinc, and silver, but the deposits are not so rich as to have prompted large mining enterprises. The granite output in 1899 amounted to $1 221 080.

Climate, Soil, and Agriculture.—The great drawback to agriculture in Maine is the shortness of its summers, but the heavy snows prevent the ground from freezing deeply and in the spring vegetation advances with exceedingly rapid steps. The hay and potato crops are of especial excellence in point of quality and quantity and both afford a large surplus for export. Maine does well southward and in the NE winter wheat is a favored crop. The oats are of a superior quality. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were oats, 5,357 012 bushels buckwheat, 719 700 bushels corn, 440 244 bushels barley 815 519 bushels wheat 40 755 bushels; rye, 17 880 bushels potatoes, 4 200 208 bushels and hay 843 937 tons. The apple-tree is hardy and productive in Maine, and much attention is given to its cultivation. The state breeds many horses, and cattle for the markets of other states, and its dairy products are of great value. The wool-clip is large and of good quality, the quantity of washed and scoured wool obtained in 1900 amounting to 1 433 068 pounds. The aggregate value of the blueberries and huckleberries gathered from the waste lands and exported both in the fresh and canned state is very large, the value of the canned product alone amounting to upward of $100 000. The production of sugar from beets has been undertaken with profit.

Forest Products.—Maine has afforded very large quantities of the noble white (or Weymouth) pine so highly prized by house- and ship-builders, but the reduction of this timber is now comparatively small and Maine has fallen from her rank as the first timber-producing state of the Union. But the lumber industry is still very large and the state cuts saws and sells immense amounts of planks, deals, boards, scantlings, palings, laths, clep-boards, shingles, shooks, heading, ship-timber, furniture- and chair-stock, wooden ware, carriage-stuff and the like. Spruce, hemlock, cedar, birch, hard maple and black and white ash are the most abundant of the useful timber trees. The forest products include potash charcoal, firewood, tanners bark (principally hemlock) and maple sugar, the last three being a large aggregate value. Oak timber is found near the coast but is not especially abundant in the interior. The total woodland still covers nearly 80 per cent. of the area of the state, the largest forest tracts are of spruce especially in the regions drained by the Androscoggin, Penobscot, and St. John rivers. The lumber products of the state in 1899 were valued at $13 429 403. The rivers afford excellent facilities for the floating, rafting, sawing and shipping of logs and lumber.

Fisheries and other Marine Products.—Maine has naturally been precluded to a great extent here, on account of the excellent harbor facilities presented by the deeply convoluted coast-line and the numerous navigable rivers and estuaries. The principal food fishes taken are cod and mackerel, herring, haddock, halibut, etc., and a great number of unmarketable or oil-producing fishes (chiefly the menhaden) are taken and utilized in the manufacture of oil and fish guano. Salmon are caught quite largely in the Penobscot and some of the other waters. The lobster-catch of Maine is very important and canned lobster is extensively prepared for the general market. About 20 000 persons were in 1900 engaged in the sea- and shore-fisheries, bringing in an aggregate product of several million dollars. More than one-half of the amount is returned by the canned-sardine industry. Ship building is still a leading pursuit in the coast towns whose population is largely engaged in maritime pursuits and especially in the coasting trade. Maine owns many vessels employed in her own proper commerce as well as in that of the other Atlantic states and in trade with the West Indies. The total tonnage launched in 1900 was upward of 58,000 tons.

Manufactures.—The important manufactures of lumber and lime, the building-stone industry, ship-building, etc., have already been alluded to. The great seats of the lumber trade are Augusta, Bangor, Biddeford, Calais, Eastport, Fairfield, and Lewiston, those of ship-building are Bath, Bangor, Belfast, Calais, and other maritime towns. The cotton manufacture has its chief seats at Lewiston, Augusta, Biddeford, Brunswick, Waterville, etc., and is one of the leading industrial interests of the state. Woollens are manufactured at many points, chiefly for domestic use. The leather manufacturers have assumed large proportions. Other considerable industries are the manufacture of scythes axes, farming implements, boots and shoes, paper and wood pulp, bagging cordage, spars, ship's furniture, glass, pottery, bricks, machinery, fish oil, fish guano, pork, charcoal, starch soap, and countless articles of wood, such as pags, spools, stave, household wares, shuttles, lards, furniture, barrels, shooks, kegs, small joinery and turners' work. The canning of lobsters, fish, green corn, fruits, and vegetables for food is an extensive business and now ranks as one of the first industries of the state. Almost every community has its manufacturing pursuits and, although they are in many cases conducted upon a small scale, the total result is very great.

Commerce.—The exports of Maine include, in addition to lumber and the product of the fisheries and canning establishments, a large proportion of the miscellaneous manufactured products of the state, as well as cattle, hay, potatoes, wool, and dairy products. Ice is also gathered on a very large scale, and its collection, storage, and export afford profitable employment. During the fiscal year ending June 30 1900 the value of the exports passing through the different ports was $10,203,120.

Railroad.—Maine is traversed by railroads which form important links in the great chain of communication extending from Halifax Nova Scotia and Montreal southward to central Texas and westward to the Pacific coast. Portland is the great railroad centre of the state. In 1841 there were only 11 miles of railroad. In 1844 62 miles. In 1850 243 miles. In 1860 473 miles. In 1870 786 miles. In 1870 980 miles. In 1880 1377 miles and in 1900 1921 miles.

Counties, Cities and Towns, etc.—Maine has 16 counties as follows: Androscoggin, Arden, Cumberland, Franklin, Hancock, Kennebec, Knox, Lincoln, Oxford, Penobscot, Piscataquis, Sagadahoc, Somerset, Waldo, Washington, and York. The chief cities and towns are Portland the principal seaport, on Casco Bay (pop. in 1900 50,145). Lewiston a principal seat of the cotton manufacture (pop. 23,761). Bangor on the Penobscot, a centre of the lumber business and the seat of important trade and manufactures (21,850). Hallowell (10,145). Auburn (12,951). Augusta, the capital, on the Kennebec (11,863). Bath a seaport near the mouth of the Kennebec (16,477). Waterville (9,477). Hallowell (8,150). Calais (765). Westbrook (7,283). South Portland (6,387). Orono, Gardiner, Westport, Ellsworth, Brewer, Belfast, Skowhegan.

The legislature whose members are elected biennially consists of a House of Representatives (from the towns) and a Senate (representing districts bounded by county lines). The governor of the state is elected biennially. Maine sends 4 representatives to the lower house of the national Congress.

Education.—There are normal and training schools at Castine, Farmington, Gorham, Lewiston and Springfield besides a practice school at Portland and private training schools. Bowdoin College, at Brunswick, is the oldest and most largely endowed college in the state. Lewiston is the seat of Bates College and Waterville of Colby College. At Orono is the University of Maine and state agricultural college. Theological schools exist at Bangor and Lewiston and a medical school at Brunswick with a subsidiary or affiliated school at Portland. There are many academies and denominational schools some of them of high reputation.

The Population of Maine is chiefly of New England stock most of its original settlers having gone there from Massachusetts and New Hampshire after the war of independence (1775-83) but there has been a large immigration from the British provinces mainly of French-speaking people, while the populous settlements of Acadian French in the extreme N.E. date from 1755. Pop. in 1790 95,540. In 1800 151,719. In 1810 228,705. In 1820 298,335. In 1830 399,455. In 1840 501,707. In 1850 683,109. In 1860 928,270. In 1870 1,026,315. In 1880 1,448,936. In 1890 1,661,080. In 1900 1,904,400.

History.—In 1604 a French colony was planted on an island in the St. Croix River but soon abandoned. An English colony established in 1607 by Sir John Popham and Sir Ferdinando Gorges at the mouth of Kennebec River fared no better. In 1622 Gorges and Sir John Mason received a grant of the southwestern corner of the region with port of what is now New Hampshire. A few years later permanent settlements were established. Eastern Maine was a portion of the French colony of Acadia. In 1635 the French expelled the English colonists from the Penobscot region and in 1665 they took led Castine. Soon after the middle of the seventeenth century Massachusetts brought the English settlements under her dominion. France had to surrender Acadia to England in 1713 and the limits of Maine were greatly extended. In 1820 the district of Maine was severed from Massachusetts and was admitted to the Union as a state. The boundary on the side of the British possessions was not clearly established until 1842, when it was settled by the Webster-Ashburton treaty.

Mainz, main (anc. M. pincetum or Mayentia from Er. Mayence) also written in English Mainz and Mayence, the largest city of the grand-duchy of Hesse, capital of the province of Rhenish Hesse, and one of the principal fortresses of Germany on the left bank of the Rhine opposite the mouth of the Moselle 20 miles WNW of Frankfurt. The older portion of the city, with its numerous Gothic buildings and its narrow and irregular streets, presents a picturesque appearance, but with the extension of the lines of circumvallation a fine modern section has sprung up to the NW. Where the new city adjoins the old town the Kaiserstrasse, a splendid park avenue with a width of 200 feet, has been laid out. A one-planed with immense flights of stone stairs extends along the Rhine. The most noteworthy building is the venerable cathedral on the Marktplatz dating in its present form from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, having six towers and containing the handsome brazen doors of the tenth century church and the tombs of many of the archbishops. Much work was expended on this edifice in the way of restoration and rebuilding in the course of the nineteenth century. Among other ecclesiastical structures are the mediæval church of St. Stephen (occupying a commanding position above the Rhine, with beautiful cloisters) the church of Our Lady and the church of St. Peter. The most interesting secular structures are the former archiepiscopal and electoral palace, now a museum containing a superb collection of Roman and Germanic antiquities the municipal library of about 200,000 volumes a picture-gallery, and the Gutenberg Museum, the recently constructed city hall (Stadthalle) on the Stadtplatz the grand-ducal residence, formerly a lodge of the Teutonic Knights on the Schillerplatz and the central railway station. The great quadrangular citadel on the site of the Roman castrum contains a circular mass of concrete in the form of a tower known as the Drausturm (or Bligstein) and supposed to have been erected to the memory of Drusus. There is a monument to Gutenberg a native of Mainz east from designed by Thorwaldsen, on the Gutenbergplatz and the Schillerplatz is adorned with a monument to the poet Schiller. In addition to the citadel the fortifications of Mainz consist of bastions, detached fortifications on the island of Petersberg in the Rhine, and the strong defences of Kastel on the opposite bank of the river, reached by a handsome bridge. Mainz has manufactures of leather goods, furniture, musical instruments, chemicals, etc. It is an important commercial centre, figuring prominently in the trade between Germany on the one side and Belgium and Holland on the other.

Maine was a place of great importance under the Romans. The barbarian invasions brought ruin upon it, but it revived under the Franks. Under its archbishops who held the primacy in Germany it rose into prominence and by the tenth century it was a considerable city. About the middle of the thirteenth century it became autonomous, but about two centuries later the archbishops brought the city which had become a flourishing centre of trade again under their dominion. Maine witnessed the birth of the art of printing with movable types shortly before the middle of the fifteenth century. The archbishops of Maine possessed the dignity of imperial electors and were archbishops of the Empire. Their temporal sway extended over considerable territory. The principality was swallowed up in the wars of the French Revolution the city remaining for many years in the hands of the French. The secularization of the archbishopric took place in 1803 and about the same time the see was degraded from the rank of an archbishopric to that of a bishopric. In 1818 Mainz was assigned to Hesse-Darmstadt and was constituted a fortress of the German Confederation. On the organization of the new German Empire in 1871 it became an imperial fortress. From 1877 down to the close of the eighteenth century Mainz was the seat of a university. Pop. in 1890, 110,000; in 1901, 84,251.

Malay Archipelago, má-lá-er-ka-pé-lá-go called also Indian, Asiatic, and Eastern Archipelago, and Malaisia, the most extensive group of islands on the globe situated to the SE of Asia, and washed on the W by the Indian Ocean, and on the E by the Pacific Ocean. The inhabitants are largely of the Malay race. The archipelago, which is rather a political than a geographical unit, comprises Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Celebes, the Philippines, the Moluccas and the chain of islands (Holl., Lombok, Sumbawa, Flores, Sumba, Timor, Tuor Laut, Ara group) which stretch eastward from Java nearly to the island of Papua (New Guinea). The latter are frequently designated the Lesser Sunda Islands. With the exception of the Philippines which belong to the United States, the islands of Penang, Singapore, and Labuan and North Borneo which belong to Great Britain and the NW portion of the island of Borneo (containing the states of Sarawak and Brunei under British protection), practically the whole of this vast archipelago is either really or nominally under the sway of the Netherlands. The Portuguese have a few small possessions there. Within the limits here pointed out lie some of the largest and finest islands in the world, as Borneo, Sumatra, Java, Celebes, Luzon, etc. Numerous groups are scattered throughout the archipelago, consisting each of hundreds of islands, many of them of great beauty and fertility, but they are still imperfectly known and some of them even avoided by Europeans on account of the putrid habits of the natives.

The Malayan islands are geographically divisible into two groups—the islands lying W of the Strait of Lombok (Sumatra, Java, Bali, Borneo and the Philippines) which rise mainly from shallow water and have Asiatic affinities in their faunas, and the islands E of the strait which are in the main deep-water islands and which with respect to their faunas are Australian or Papuan. It is assumed that the islands of the first group were in a comparatively recent geological period united with the Asiatic continent, while those of the second group were part of a greater Australia. The line of separation (Strait of Lombok) is frequently designated Wallace's Line, named from the naturalist Alfred Russel Wallace. The island of Celebes which is largely constructed of ancient schists and crystalline rocks, seems to hold a transitional position between the two groups. The geology of the region is still imperfectly known, but the most marked feature is the large number of active and extinct volcanoes, which are directed in almost linear series through the larger Sunda Islands, and then deflected northward through the Philippines. There are vast volcanic deposits covering strata of Tertiary Age on some of the islands, the region is probably the most extensively volcanically of the earth's surface, or was so until the recent developments in the Caribbean region. Among the most famous or distinctive of the volcanoes may be mentioned, Korinchi (or Indrapura) in Sumatra, Papandayan, Bemera, and Tenggor (Tenggar) in Java, Krakatau in the Strait of Sunda, Tambora, in Sumbawa, and Mayón in the Philippines. Some of these attain to 12 000 feet or more in elevation. The lofty mountain of Borneo, Kinabalu, which is the dominating point of the archipelago, is seemingly not volcanic. For the physical characteristics, faunas, etc. of the different islands, see the special articles Borneo, Sumatra, Philippines, etc.

The principal entrances to the Malay Archipelago from the E are the Gilels Passage and Dampier Strait, off the coast of Papua, and the Molucca Strait while the straits of Malacca and of Sunda give access from the W and the straits of Lombok, Alor, Ombai, etc. from the S. The archipelago lies for the most part close to the equator which passes through Sumatra, Borneo, Celebes and Gilels (Halmahera). This entire region is excepted from the general law of the trade-wind. Within the archipelago, and thence W to the coast of Africa, the monsoons prevail blowing alternately from the SE and NW. But these winds, though locally regular and constant, vary much from place to place, and E of Celebes the seasons are reversed. The northern Philippine Islands alone fall within the region of hurricanes and boisterous winds.

Inhabitants.—The two dominant aboriginal races of the Malay Archipelago are the Malays, a people of brachycephalic short stature and dark black hair, and the Papuan (or Negritoid) race, an inferior people of a sandy black color whose chief home is Papua. The Philippines are inhabited by peoples of black and Malay stock, the ethnologic affinities of many of the tribes being still undetermined. An unusually large proportion of the whole population have maritime habits. Their chief houses are in many instances built on or over the water, the bamboo houses being constructed on stilts. The natives are skilful boat-builders and their prahoes often of 60 tons burden are excellent specimens of naval architecture.

Malay Peninsula, called also Malacca (see Chersonese and Anren) the most southern portion of continental Asia, forming the S part of the peninsula of Further India and extending from Indo-China south and southeast towards Sumatra. The peninsula begins geographically at the head of the Gulf of Siam in lat. 13° 30' N. and extends to lat. 1° 10' N. a distance of about 850 miles. The width varies from 50 miles at the Isthmus of Kra (where the elevation has been reduced to about 80 feet) in the north-central part to 210 miles at Penak in the south. The area is about 90 000 sq m. The physical features consist of magnificently wooded mountain ranges in the interior running parallel to the coast rising to 7000-8000 ft and flanked on either side by low fertile plains which in turn are flanked by mangrove swamps extending to the sea. Gunning-Taban in the N.E. has an altitude of about 7850 ft. Numerous islands lie along the coast, among them the Mergu Archipelago, Salang, Penang, Singapore, and Bintang (the last belonging to Sumatra). The rivers are short and of little use for navigation. The Malay Peninsula is noted for its valuable woods, among which are camphor, cinnamon, coccol-palm, ebony, rattan, sandal wood, teak, etc. It has vast riches in its tin, exporting more than one-half of the world's annual product of this metal. It is also rich in iron and coal also abundant. The wild animals embrace the tiger, rhinoceros, tapir, elephant, hog, buffalo, monkeys, etc. and there are many beautiful birds. Rice, pepper, sugar cane, cotton, tobacco, coffee, coconuts, betel, yams, betelnut, and the areca are the chief cultivated crops. Gums are exported in large quantities. The population is variously estimated at from 1 000 000 to 2,000 000. The inhabitants are mainly Siamese in the north, civilized Malays along the coast and in the south and uncivilized Malays mixed with aboriginal Negritoid tribes in the interior. There are many Chinese in the coast districts. Initially Malacca was divided between Elum and the British territories and protectorates or dependencies embracing half of Tenasserim, the Federate Settlements (Singapore, Penang, Malacca) the Federated Malay States (Perak, Selangor, Negri Sembilan, Pahang) and Johore.

Malay States, Federated, a group of states in the southern part of the Malay Peninsula under British protection and in political connection with the Federate Settlements. They include Perak, Selangor, Negri Sembilan, and Pahang. Negri Sembilan is a federation of several states (Remet, Ujong, Johor, Jelebu, etc.). The Federated Malay States have a total area of about 28 000 sq m. Pop. in 1901, 678 584, including 312,468 Malays, 299 739 Chinese, 55,211 natives of India, and 1422 Europeans and Americans. The Chinese and natives of India come and go in great numbers. These regions yield vast quantities of the end are rich in gold. The vegetable products include pepper, coffee, sugar, rice, tobacco, rubber and gambur. The forests yield valuable timber. The commerce is very extensive and is facilitated by several hundred miles of railway. The largest town is Kuala Lumpur in Selangor. (See the articles on the various states.)

Malta, mál-tá (It. from mál-tá sea N. of /ra) an island in the Mediterranean 56 miles S. of Sicily and 187 miles N. of Africa. It is the principal member of the Maltese group of islands (comprising Gino, Comino and some islets) which has an area of 117 sq m. and which belongs to Great Britain. Lat. about 35° 56' N. lon 14° 30' E. Greatest length 17 miles, central breadth about 9 miles. Area, 95 sq m. It is of an irregular and oval shape, deeply indented on all sides except the S. The largest bays are those of Marsa-Mrocca on the SE, and Mela and St. Paul on the NW, but the most important in every respect is the double bay formed by the up-pointed sides of the peninsula on which the capital, Valletta, stands. The SW coast is very bold. The surface is very much broken by rocks. The culminating point, near the NW coast, does not exceed 1200 feet. The rocks are all stratified and consist of limestone, fossiliferous sandstone, and clays. There are numerous caverns. The climate from the middle of October till January is delightful, but in summer the heat becomes extreme and the reflection from the bare white rocks often injures the sight. The air is usually dry and clear and the island is much frequented as a health-station. There are no lakes or real running streams in the island, but the springs are numerous and copious. The natural soil is very thin and sandy but through the industrious energy of the inhabitants in powdering up the surface-rock much adapted soil has been constructed and about two-thirds of the former barren lands are now under beautiful cultivation. The staple products are corn and cotton; the vine and olive are cultivated. Fruits, particularly figs, lemons, and oranges, are abundant and of excellent flavor. The central position of Malta in the Mediterranean makes it an important commercial depot and a valuable naval station. It has in consequence received great attention from the British government and been provided with excellent docks and strong fortifications. The natives are of mixed descent. The language of the country people is largely made up of Arabic elements, though the grammatical construction resembles that of the Italian. The educated classes speak Italian and English is spoken by many. Malta belonged successively to the Phoenicians, Greeks and Carthaginians, and became a possession of Rome during the second Punic War. In the fifth century it was seized by the Vandals, Goths and Greeks and in the ninth century it was taken from the Greeks by the Saracens. From the last it passed to Sicily whose fortunes it followed till 1530 when Charles V. granted it to the Order of St. John of Jerusalem (Knights of Malta). In 1565 the knights under La Valette withstood a tremendous siege at the hands of the Turks. In 1798 the grand master surrendered Malta to Napoleon. In 1800 it fell into the hands of the English. The island is administered by a governor who is assisted by an executive council of 5 official and 13 elected members. Pop. in 1900 183,679.

Manchester, a city municipal parliamentary and county borough and inland port of England, within the territorial limits of Lancashire on the Irwell a tributary of the Mersey here joined by the Medlock and the Irk, 154 miles NNW of London. Manchester proper lies on the left bank of the Irwell, but the borough of Salford on the opposite side is practically a portion of the city. The vast manufacturing industries are rapidly being relegated to the suburbs, the main portion of the city being now devoted to trade and finance. The business streets of Manchester present a stately architectural appearance. The principal ecclesiastical buildings are the cathedral, dating mainly from the early part of the fifteenth century, and the Catholic church of the Holy Name. St. John's Catholic cathedral is located at Salford. The secular edifices of most interest are the Gothic town-hall one of the most superb modern buildings in England with a tower 260 feet in height the Royal Infirmary, Latham College, the new buildings of Victoria University the Royal Institution the Free Trade Hall, containing an immense auditorium the Assize Courts, and the Exchange, with a Corinthian portico and a campanile. Among the public monuments are a memorial to Prince Albert in Albert Square, a bronze statue of Richard Cobden in St. Anne's Square and statues of Queen Victoria and Cromwell. At the head of the educational institutions of Manchester is Victoria University (formerly Owens College) the number of whose students is about 1150 including about 200 women. Other educational institutions are an ancient grammar school of which De Quincey was an alumnus, Chetham College or Hospital a Blue Coat school with what is reputed to be the oldest free library in Europe (containing 40 000 volumes) and a public library with 500 000 volumes Ryland a library, containing 10 000 volumes, the Manchester Art Museum the Royal Manchester College of Music, and technical and industrial schools for the most part under the direction of the municipality. Manchester has an extensive system of parks among which are Heaton Park some miles from the city and Peel and Whitworth parks, both in Salford. The municipality of Manchester has long been noted for its progressiveness. The city owns the oldest municipal gas-works in the world. Among the municipal activities may be mentioned the erection of dwellings for workmen and the establishment of great public bathing places. The water-supply of Manchester is in part drawn from Lake Thirlmere, distant about 100 miles. In 1854 a gigantic undertaking was brought to completion in the opening of the Manchester Ship Canal connecting Manchester with the Mersey at Eastham and thus making of the city a port accessible to the largest ocean steamers. This magnificent artificial water way constructed at a cost of $75 000 000, is 35 1/2 miles in length and 26 feet in depth and is wider than the Suez Canal. It has 4 locks. Manchester is the greatest industrial town of England and the centre of the cotton manufactures of the kingdom. In addition to the establishments connected with the textile industry there are manufactures of every description including machine-shops, iron steel and chemical works, and paper mills. Manchester returns 4 and Salford 3 members to parliament. The city is noted as the cradle of the Anti-Slavery and Free Trade movements in England.

Manchester grew to be a flourishing little town in the Middle Ages. An influx of immigrants from the Netherlands in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries promoted its prosperity. At the beginning of the eighteenth century it had still only about 10 000 inhabitants. By 1801 the population had risen to 75 000. In 1830 the Manchester and Liverpool railway the first railway in which passenger transportation on a large scale was inaugurated was opened for traffic. With the rapid development of the cotton industry the population grew at an extraordinary rate. In 1851 it amounted to 303 000 in 1891 it had reached 605 368 and in 1901 it was 543 272. Manchuria, man-choo re-a (Chinese Tung-see-sheng, i.e. the Three Eastern Provinces) an extensive region of eastern Asia, forming the northeasternmost division of the Chinese Empire, between (approx.) lat. 39° and 53° 20' N., and having broadly Korea and the Yellow Sea on the S. Mongolia and the Russian territories on the W., and the Russian Amur province and Primor'ka on the N. and E. Area, about 300,000 sq. mi. The western boundaries have not been precisely fixed, but are now generally placed so as to include the main Khingan mountains within the territory. The greater portion of the N. boundary is formed by the Amur and Argun rivers. From Korea the region is separated by the Yalu and Tumen rivers and the Pal-shan mountains (rising to 8000 feet). The chief interior stream is the Sengari (an affluent of the Amur) which with its tributary the Nenki, is freely navigated by Russian steamers. Most of the Manchurian region is mountainous, but a portion on the N. has a steppe character. The climate is on the whole healthy and invigorating although showing extremes of temperature, from -20° or even -50° in winter to 90° and more in summer. The soil is highly productive and yields most of the Chinese crops (millet, wheat, barley, rice, corn, beans, peas, potatoes, tobacco, rhubarb, growing cotton, hemp, etc.). Forests of pine oak elm, and walnut cover a large part of the region. The fauna includes a number of the far-bearing animals (sable, etc.) the bear and tiger. Among the mineral resources gold and coal are attracting considerable attention. The region is traversed by the Transiberian railway. Manchuria consists of three provinces: Liao-tung (or Shing king) Kwin, and Tientsin (Hsiao tung) in the last two of which the inhabitants are largely Manchurian. The population is variously estimated at from 5,500,000 to 10,000,000. The great bulk of the inhabitants are Chinese. The Manchus are a Tungusian race. Since the middle of the seventeenth century the Manchus dynasty has reigned in China, and the Manchus tongue otherwise little spoken and almost extinct, has become the court and the official language. Principal towns Mukden Kwin Argun Harbin Kien-chow Feng hwang sheng Niu-chung and Port Arthur at the extremity of the peninsula of Liautung. In 1898 Russia obtained from the Chinese government a lease of the harbors of Port Arthur and Ta-hon was together with the neighboring district. At Port Arthur a great fortified naval station was established and at the port of Ta-hon was the town of Delny was founded, intended to be a great outlet of Russian commerce. The revolutions in China often beg the Russian movement of 1900 invited an advance of Russian into Manchuria. Her forces occupied the country from which she refused to withdraw. The encroachments of Russia involved her in a disastrous war with Japan in 1904. Delny with its costly harbor works, Port Arthur and Mukden fell into the hands of the enemy. By the terms of the treaty of Portsmouth Sept. 5 1905 Russia was obliged to withdraw from Manchuria.

Manila (Sp. pron mā-nē-lā) the capital of the island of Luzon and of all the Philippine Islands, seat of a Roman Catholic archbishop and one of the great emporiums of the East, situated on the W. coast of the island at the head of Manila Bay (see MANILA BAY) at the mouth of the river Pasig. Lat. of observatory 14° 34' 41" N. Lon. 120° 58' 39" E. The island is prolonged into the bay by two piers, terminating the one in a small fort the other in a light-house. On the S. side of the river stands the city proper (called marina or walled town) strongly fortified, sombre and dull, without places of recreation except the gardens in the public squares. Here reside the authorities and here are located the cathedral, the principal institutions of learning, etc. The streets are straight, well paved, and lighted by electricity; the main street is the Calle Real. The city and suburbs are served by tram-cars. A railroad connects Manila with Dagupan. The water supply is pure and abundant. The best houses have usually but one story above the ground floor the upper portion owing to earthquake destructions being built generally of wood. On the N. side of the Pasig is the Binondo suburb, more populous than the city itself. It is the great centre of trade. Bridges connect it with the city proper. The chief street is the Escolta, much improved of late years, having good European shops and the central post office and telegraph station. In Binondo Chinese half-castes and Indians do boot-and-shoe-making, book-binding, painting and engraving, gold- and silver-smithing, etc. In the Tondo ward live the poorest working classes—fishermen, day laborers, cannermen, weavers, etc. San Miguel is a fashionable residence quarter. Other suburbs have distinct characteristics. Good bridges facilitate their connection with the city. San Luis and San Pedro Macati are health resorts for convalescents. The principal public buildings of Manila are the cathedral, palace of the governor and the archbishop, the town house, churches of the different religious orders, barracks, arsenals, military hospitals, and custom-house. There are no theatres of importance, but there are cock pits, cafes, riding school and race-course, etc. The city has several public squares with gardens the foremost of which are the Prado which has a bronze statue of Charles IV. and the Plaza or Plaza de Magallanes, with an obelisk erected in the memory of Magellan. The Luneta is a favorite promenade. A telephone system is established in the city and the environs.

The educational institutions include the University of San Tomas, under the Dominican, attended by about 1200 students, the Jesuit college of San Joé, the Dominican college of San Juan de Letran, colleges for girls, the municipal gymnasium with a physical laboratory, natural history museum and fine astronomical apparatus, etc. There is a meteorological observatory. New educational institutions and bureaus are being established under the American government. Manila is the commercial and industrial metropolis of the Philippine Islands. It has steam communication with the principal maritime ports of the world. The exports are sugar, abaca, aspen wood, coffee, cigars and tobacco, hides, indigo, gun mastic, cordage, mother-of-pearl, abalone, etc. amounting to about 80 per cent. of the whole trade of the Philippines. The leading industry is the manufacture of cigars and tobacco, in which many thousands of hands are employed. Other manufactures are cordage, fabrics of abaca (manila) etc. also apple-leaf fibre (piña) and pure or mixed cotton goods, mats, carpets, metal goods, and cigar-cases. There are also sugar refineries, breweries and manufactures of machinery. The climate of Manila is unvaryingly tropical, and generally uniform in temperature, which is a mean for the year is about 80°.

Manitoba, a province of Canada, is bounded on the S by Minnesota and North Dakota, NE by Keewatin E by Ontario, and W and NW by Assinibou and Saskatchewan. Area 71,950 sq. m. A considerable part of the province is prairie land perfectly level and diversified by groups of elm ash oak poplar basswood and ash leaf maple. The Pembina Mountains occupy the SW and W portions. The soil which in great part is derived from the alluvium of the (outlying bed) Quaternary Lake Agassiz is among the richest of the world and magnificently adapted to the cultivation of wheat.

The principal rivers are the Red River which falls into the N extremity of Lake Winnipeg and its affluent, the Assinibou. The largest lakes (only a part of whose area however is in Manitoba) are Winnipeg, 230 miles long and 5 to 50 miles wide; Manitoba 110 miles long and 20 miles wide and Winnipegosis.

The climate of Manitoba though very severe in winter is occasionally hot in summer. The mean for the three winter months of December, January and February is 5° below zero, and for the summer months of June, July and August, 65°. The low temperatures of the winter is offset by a clear dry atmosphere and the season is very healthy. The extremes are -40° and 95°. Wheat ripens in 110 days and gives an average return of 20 to 25 bushels to the acre. All kinds of garden vegetables, as well as oats, barley, Indian corn, hops, flax, hemp, potatoes and other root-crops, are easily raised. The chief agricultural crops were in 1901 wheat, 83,077,267 bushels and oats 34,478,160. The grassy savannas of the Red River afford magnificent pasturage. Lignite coal is found and the Archæan mountains give promise of considerable mineral wealth. The public affairs are administered by a lieutenant-governor an executive council and a legislative assembly elected by the people. Capital, Winnipeg. Pop. in 1871 25,228 in 1881 62,800 in 1891 154,442 in 1901 264,947.

This section of North America was first visited by the French. The Chevalier de la Vérandrye built a fort at the mouth of the Assinibou in 1731. The French traded there alone for many years, but in 1767 the first English traders visited the region and soon several rival companies were in operation. The Hudson Bay Company having in 1811 sold a tract of land to the earl of Selkirk on both sides of the Assinibou and of the Red River he planted there in 1812 a colony known by the name of Selkirk Settlement, Red River Settlement or Assiniboula. In 1820 the Hudson Bay Company repurchased the land from the heirs of Lord Selkirk. This colony the seat of whose administration was Fort Garry became the nucleus of the province of Manitoba. In 1869 the Hudson Bay Company transferred to the imperial government their territorial rights and governing responsibilities, and in 1870 England handed over the whole to the Canadian government. The entry of Manitoba into the Confederation was effected in 1870.

The public edifices most deserving of notice are the cathedral (St. Marie Majeure), a large neo-Hellenic structure erected in 1358-93 and measuring 440 feet in length the episcopal palace, the Palais de Justice, the church of St. Victor of great antiquity erected on the site of a grotto or cavern in which the first Christians were accustomed to meet in secret for worship; the Hôtel de Ville the prefecture, a large edifice, erected in 1861-67 the bourse, with a fine meeting hall of the chamber of commerce the Palais de Longchamp (1862-69) with museums of paintings and natural history the post-office (1883-81) the observatory library and theatre. The triumphal arch is a notable structure. The quays, lined with commodious warehouses have a length of over 13 miles and flank the several basins (Basin National, Luxemb., Joliette, Arant-Port, Basin Sud, Vieux-Port, etc.) which unite to form the busy harbor.

Marcellian possesses facilities of science and of medicine (university of Aix-Marseille) a naval observatory and emies and societies of sciences, belles-lettres arts and of medicine, a school of hydrography schools of art, industry and music, a municipal library of over 100,000 volumes, botanical garden, museum of natural history zoological garden etc. Its luxuriance is one of the highest in the world. Marcellian has manufactures of soap (much more extensive than in any other city of the world) furniture, spirits, leather chemicals, and tobacco, oil and four mills sugar-refineries ship-building yards, naval equipment establishments, machine-shops, petroleum refineries, etc.

The harbor which is one of the finest in France, is secure in all weather and possesses extensive anchorage for vessels in from 12 to 24 feet of water. It is defended by fortifications. With respect to the amount of tonnage owned, Marcellian holds the first rank among the ports of the republic. Its foreign commerce exceeds that of every other port in France and its coast-wise trade is very great. The chief articles of export include cereals soap, wine fruits oil seeds coal textiles, sugar, coffee, hides, candles, wool and silk and sheep from Algeria. The trade is mainly with the Mediterranean countries but extends to all parts of the world. There are steamship lines to Asia the E. and W. coasts of Africa, and to South America.

Marcellian appears to have been founded by the Phoenicians, but about 600 B.C. the Phoenician settlement was supplanted by a colony from the Greek city of Phoenicia, in Asia Minor. Marcellian, as the Greek city was called (L. Marcellia) rose to be a great commercial commonwealth and a centre of intellectual activity. In the first century B.C. it was swallowed up in the Roman world. During a great part of the Middle Ages it was more or less independent. In 1461 Provence, and with it Marcellian, were united with the French crown. Pop. in 1802 280,910; in 1881 289,349; in 1891 403,749; in 1901 491,181. Martinique, mas-tin-ék formerly called by the natives Madrana, má-dá-ná (Sp. Martinica, mas-té-ne' ko) one of the French West India Islands, 30 miles S by W of Dominica and 20 miles N of St. Lucia. It is of irregular shape, high and rocky about 39 miles long and 10 to 15 miles broad. Area, 380 sq m. It is almost entirely of volcanic construction with several well-marked groups or knots of volcanic mountains (mornes, pitons) as the Diamond, Vauchan (1555 feet), Piton de Carbet (3655 ft.) and Mont (or Montagne) Pelée (lat. 14° 48' N), the loftiest peak of the island which before the catastrophic eruption of May 8 1902 (which destroyed the city of Saint-Pierre and about 30,000 inhabitants) had an altitude of 4436 (or 4250?) ft. rose in 1903 in the extended tower of rock to a height of 5200 ft. and has now an altitude of about 4500 ft. (See PAIX.) Extensive masses of volcanic rocks cover the interior and extend from the mountains to the shores of the sea, where they form numerous deep indentations along the coast. Between the volcanic rocks occur broad irregular valleys of great fertility. There are some raised beaches, dating back to a comparatively recent period. About two-fifths of the island is under cultivation. The mountain slopes are in some parts still covered with nearly virgin forests. Numerous streams flow from the heights, most of them mere rivulets, but a few (Lamantin) are navigable for boats for a short distance from their mouths. The productions are sugar, coffee, cacao, and tobacco, the principal resources of the colony being the cultivation of the cane. The island, which is traversed by excellent roads, was formerly infested by serpents (fer-de-lance). The most distinctive element in the indigenous mammalian fauna of the island is the opossum. The climate is on the whole equatorial and the heat is measurably tempered by the steadily blowing trade-winds. Annual precipitation about 90 inches.

Martinique has several good harbors, the best of which is at Port-de-France, the capital on the SW side. The principal town prior to May 1902 was Saint-Pierre, on the NW side of the island. Other towns are Marin Galloo, Robert, Trinité, Marigot, Grand Anse, Basse-Pointe, Grande Rivière, etc. The administration of Martinique is under a governor and a general council. The island was discovered by the Spaniards in 1493. In 1635 it was settled by the French, whose cruel treatment eventually exterminated the aboriginal race. It was taken by the British in 1794 and restored in 1802. It was again taken by the British in 1809 and restored a second time to France in 1814. The island has been at different times visited by tornadoes and earthquakes. In 1902, by the catastrophic eruptions of May 8 and Aug 30. Pelée established a record of volcanic destructibility perhaps not surpassed by any other volcano. Pop. in 1903 about 175,000, chiefly blacks or mixtures of blacks, Creoles and Indians. The island is represented in the French legislature by 1 senator and 3 deputies.

Maryland (named in honor of Queen Henrietta Maria, consort of Charles I.) one of the Middle Atlantic states of the American Union and one of the original thirteen states, is bounded N by Pennsylvania, E by Delaware and the Atlantic Ocean and S, SW and W by Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia, from the two former of which it is for the most part separated by the Potomac River It is of very irregular outline, and Chesapeake Bay and the Susquehanna River divide the main body of the state into two portions,—the Eastern and the Western Shore. There are some small islands in the bay and off the Atlantic coast, nearly all in close proximity to the Eastern Shore. Area, of the land surface 9640 sq m of the appertaining waters, about 2460 sq m The N limit is Mason and Dixon's line, 39° 43' 30" N lat

Face of the Country.—The Eastern Shore is a level sandy, but mainly fertile region, nowhere of great elevation though in the N there are finely rounded hills, while southward there are swampy tracts and patches of woodland, consisting largely of red-cedar, cypress, and white-oak, and the streams, though not large, are to a remarkable degree deep and navigable. W of the bay the surface is in general similar to that just described, but more uneven and varied in character as far NW as the low ridge which extends SW from the Susquehanna at the Pennsylvania state line to a point near Rockville on the Potomac. This is the southeasternmost geographical (although not geological) representative of the parallel ridges of the Alleghany system, numbers of which cross the W half of the state for the most part in steep and bold ridges, with wide and exceedingly fertile intervening valleys. In the extreme W the beautiful elevated valleys are known as glades. The principal of the traversing heights and ridges, passing from E to W are known locally as Catoctin South North Green Warrior, Mottin, Nicholson, Pilegy Great Savage, Great Backbone, Meadow Negro, and Winding ridges or mountains, the more defined of which have direct continuations NE in Pennsylvania and SW in Virginia and West Virginia (South Mountain at the extension of the Blue Ridge and North Mountain at the continuation of the Alleghany or Blue Mountains). The highest elevations of the state exceed but little, if at all 3000 feet. Semon Rock lies at an altitude of 2942 feet. Dora a Rock W of Cumberland, is 2882 feet high. The western section is traversed by the great valley, which has its continuation to the N in the Cumberland Valley of Pennsylvania and to the E in the Shenandoah Valley of West Virginia and Virginia.

Rivers and Navigable Waters.—The Potomac is navigated by sea-going vessels as far as Georgetown D C. from which point the navigation on internal waters was extended in the first half of the nineteenth century by the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal to the western parts of the state. This canal was at one time of great benefit to the whole Atlantic seaboard bringing down much coal and iron etc at very cheap rates. The Chesapeake Bay affords a great extent of safely navigable water and into it flow the Patuxent Patuxent, Severn Gunpowder Elk Chester Choptank Nantuxet, Pocomoke, and other navigable streams, besides the Susquehanna, only a few miles of whose course is within the state and which is not extensively navigated. The Delaware and Chesapeake Canal connects the navigable waters of the state with Delaware Bay and the Susquehanna and Tidewater Canal follows the W bank of the Susquehanna Geology.—The E. half of the Eastern Shore is alluvial and Post-Tertiary in central and north-central portions are Tertiary and the N is of Cretaceous age, the narrow Cretaceous belt extending southward to the District of Columbia and having on its SE flank a wide area of the Tertiary NW of the Cretaceous appears a wide belt referred to the Laurentian or Eocene age, but overlaid along its centre by a strip of the Triassic crossing the state all these belts and stripes having more or less of the general NE and SW direction of the mountains and the Atlantic coast. The Alleghanies proper are constructed of Silurian Devonian and Carboniferous strata, and carry in their newer members important deposits of coal. Practically all the coal of the state is mined in but two counties, Allegany and Garrett, and from the three basins known as the Cumberland, George's Creek and Frontburg. The output in 1903 was 4,245,155 short tons. The measure also yield useful clay ironstones and black band ores and iron shales of fair quality. Brown hematite and various other ores of iron are found. The state has large deposits of excellent fire-clays and is noted for the fine quality of its manufactured bricks. Marble granite (Port Deposit) serpentine, and other building stones, limestone for burning, and roofing-slates are among the quarry products. Kaolin lignite, iron pyrites amber elum, ochres ores of chromium home stone, millstones, cements, breccia, valuable (glauconitic and other) marls, barytes, gypsum, magnesian etc occur in varying degrees of abundance.

Agricultural Resources etc.—Wheat corn oats, tobacco, live-stock wool pork sweet and other potatoes, various fruits (especially peaches), garden produce, and butter are the staple products. The chief agricultural crops of the state in 1900 were corn 15,232,602 bushels wheat, 15,187,848 bushels oats 1,763,416 bushels; rye, 408,622 bushels pota-tees, 1,269,465 bushels; and hay, 943,303 tons. The Eastern Shore has particularly developed into a region of fruit cultivation. The climate of eastern Maryland is singularly mild for its latitude and most parts of the state are healthful, except that malarial fevers prevail near the marshy tracts.

Manufactures. Forest Products.—The manufacturing interests of the state are varied and have their chief seat in the city of Baltimore and its vicinity. Boots and shoes, bricks, cement, lime, chemicals, clothing, barrels, cotton and woolen goods and other textiles, canned goods (fruits, vegetables, meats, and oysters) flour, furniture, leather, lumber, machinery and metalware are leading articles of manufacture. The manufacture of iron steel and tobacco, and slaughtering have risen to be leading industries. Ship building is still carried on on a fairly extensive scale. The value of the products of some of the leading industries was in 1900: Fruit and vegetables (canned and preserved) $11,090,245; tobacco, $9,896,928; slaughtering, $8,645,389; flouring and grist mill products, $1,557,722; iron and steel, $8,739,495; fertilizers, $5,481,905. There were, in 1900, 43 grain and fruit distilleries in operation.

The forest products are mainly oak for ship-timber and hickory, cedar and cypress shingles, cypress bark, sumach leaves for tanning, charcoal and firewood.

Fisheries, etc.—The oyster fisheries of Maryland are more extensive than those of any other state. The somps, mules, bays, and estuaries of the coast being a favorite habitat of the oyster, and so extensive is this business that the state has been obliged to enact a series of statutes and to maintain a fleet of armed vessels for its regulation. The shad, and other fisheries are also important and lucrative. The canvas-back duck hunts the marshes of this state, where its special food, a species of Tallinnaria gives to the bird a flesh its peculiar celery flavor so much esteemed by epicures. Red-birds, wild-geese, rails, snipe, and grouse haunt the waste lands, old fields, and marshes and afford autumnal occupation for the sportsman. The soft-shelled crabs and terrapins of the Baltimore markets are celebrated for their excellence.

Railroads.—The construction of the Baltimore and Ohio R. the pioneer of the great railway lines of America, was begun in 1828. In 1830 the state had 15 miles of railroad. In 1846 (including the District of Columbia) 254 miles. In 1855 527 miles. In 1860 386 miles. In 1870 671 miles. In 1880 1046 miles. In 1890 1270 miles and in 1900 1359 miles.

Counties.—Maryland has 23 counties besides the independent city of Baltimore. They are Allegany, Anne Arundel, Baltimore, Calvert, Carroll, Cecil, Charles, Dorchester, Frederick, Garrett, Harford, Howard, Kent, Montgomery, Prince George's, Queen Anne's, St. Mary's, Somerset, Talbot, Washington, Wicomico, and Worcester.

Cities and Towns.—The principal cities and towns in old Maryland, the metropolis (pop. in 1900 508,917) Annapolis, the state capital (8402). Cumberland (17,128). Hagerstown (13,401), Frederick (9298). Cambridge (6747). Frostburg, Salisbury, Westminster, Havre de Grace, Crisfield, and Eaten.

Education.—The public school system of Baltimore was first legally established in 1827. There is a state normal school in that city and another at Frostburg and training schools elsewhere. There are colleges at Baltimore, Frederick, Chestertown (Washington College), Emmittsburg (Mount St. Mary's College, St. Joseph's Academy), New Windsor, Westminster (Western Maryland College), Annapolis, Ellwood City (Book Hill and St. Charles Colleges) and other points. The leading institution of learning of the state and one of the foremost centers of higher education in the United States is the Johns Hopkins University of Baltimore. The national naval academy and St. John's College are located at Annapolis and the state agricultural college at College Park. The Jacob Tunn Institute at Fort Deposit is a secondary school on a splendid scale. The city of Baltimore contains the University of Maryland, the Maryland Institute, the Peabody Institute, Woman's College, and Bryn Mawr School.

Government.—The governor is chosen for a term of four years. The general assembly consists of a Senate and a House of Delegates. The senators are elected for 4 years and the delegates for 2 years. The state sends 6 members to the lower house of the national Congress.

Population.—The population in 1660 was 12,000. In 1671, 20,000; in 1753 154,188; in 1790 319,738; in 1800 341,943; in 1810 389,546; in 1820 407,350; in 1830 447,646; in 1840, 479,019; in 1850 563,034; in 1860 687,049; of whom 115,918 were white, 23,941 free colored, and 87,189 slaves. In 1870 780,894; in 1880 934,943; in 1890 1,042,399; in 1900 1,190,640 (235,064 colored). The foreign-born population numbers less than 19 per cent.

History.—Maryland had its first settlement on Kent Island in 1631 and was colonized in 1634 by English Roman Catholics under Leonard Calvert, a brother of Lord Baltimore, the patentee and proprietor. The first settlement under the patent was at St. Mary's. In 1649 religious toleration was enacted for members of all Christian sects and churches excepting those who denied the Trinity. For many years the colony was distracted by contests between the proprietary party and turbulent Puritan settlers and others. The Roman Catholics were long debarred from the suffrage and not permitted to worship in public. Baltimore was founded in 1729. In 1770 Maryland constituted itself a state. Maryland remained a slave state until the final abolition of slavery in the United States, but she did not follow the Southern States in their attempted secession that step having been presented as much by the strength of the Union party in the state as by the presence of federal troops. Since the Civil War there has been a large immigration from the North and the peach-growing and market-gardening industries of the Eastern Shore have been immensely developed.

Massachusetts, one of the New England states and one of the original thirteen states of the American Union is bounded on the N by Vermont and New Hampshire, E by the Atlantic Ocean S by the Allantio Ocean and by Rhode Island and Connecticut, and W by Rhode Island and New York. There are several islands within the state limits (Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard, Elizabeth Islands, etc.) and in the SE the peninsula of Cape Cod extends into the sea forming Cape Cod Bay and from its shape, is sometimes called the right arm of the commonwealth. Area, 8016 sq m. of which the land area is 8040 sq m.

Face of the Country.—In the extreme W between the sharp and somewhat precipitous elevations of the Taconic Mountains, stretching along the New York boundary line, and the more easterly parallel range of the Hoosac Mountain and Green Mountains proper (highest elevation Spruce Hill, 2485 feet) extends the beautiful Berkshire Valley (with the Berkshire Hills) containing the Housatonic and Hoosac rivers which flow S and N respectively (See Berkshires Hills and Otsego Mountains). The Green Mountains region affords good pasturage and is well adapted to the dairy-business and to stock raising. East of this belt lies the fertile and beautiful valley of the Connecticut River. The western slope of the broken and hilly country E of the Connecticut Valley is a dissected plateau of 1000-1100 feet elevation and affords excellent farming tracts. When the western slope of these hills is reached we find a tract which, though not materially fertile has under shifful culture, developed generous qualities as a farming region. The southwestern part, the 'Old Colony' as it is called is very level with a sandy and generally stony soil covered naturally with pine forests. This part of the state abounds in shallow lakes, many of which especially those upon Cape Cod have no connection with the sea but are filled with pure fresh water. This SE section abounds in swamps, which produce much cedar lumber and here the cranberry is profitably grown upon a very large scale. The salt marshes, which extend along a part of the eastern coast of Massachusetts afford much hay of which the quality is often very good. The highest elevation in the state is Graylock (or Saddle) Mountain (3535 feet) in the NW corner in Berkshire co. In this section there are a number of peaks exceeding 2000 ft. in height, but no others reaching 3000 ft. E of the Connecticut River the highest point is Mount Wachusett, a detached elevation in Worcester co. 2108 ft. high. Other noteworthy elevations are Mount Everett in the SW (2824 ft.), and Mount Tom (2124 ft.). Nantucket Holyoke (554 ft.) Sugar Loaf and Metawamp and Pocumtuck in the Connecticut Valley.

Coast-line. Harbor Rivers.—The Massachusetts coast-line which extends from Salisbury Beach on the N to near Narragansett Bay on the S is indented by numerous large bays, of which the most important are Massachusetts Bay (terminating in Boston Harbor) Cape Cod Bay and Buzzard's Bay. Less prominent inlets and harbors are those (beginning at the N.) of Newburyport, Ipswich, Annisquam (or Squam), Gloucester, Beverly, Salem, Marblehead, Nahant, Lynn, Plymouth, Sandwich, Barnstable, Wellfleet, Provincetown, Chatham, Cotuit, Hyannis, Woods Hole, New Bedford and Westport. Mount Hope Bay in the SW. an extension of Narragansett Bay receives the navigable Taunton River. Plum Island is remarkable as being the northernmost of the asedepses that are so characteristic of the Atlantic coast. Cape Ann is a bold and rocky promontory whose inhabitants are largely engaged in the fisheries and in granite-quarrying. The Connecticut River which has been dammed at Turner Falls and Holyoke and furnishes immense water power traverses the state in an almost due N. and S. course. The Merrimack, Housatonic, Hoosac, Deerfield, Mill, Westfield, Millis, Chuaque, Ware, Swift, Nashua, Blackstone, Concord, Charlestown, Amherst, Shawhees, Spicket, Powow, Womantic and Taunton rivers and countless smaller streams, afford water power which is very extensively utilized. The Connecticut, Merrimack, and some of the smaller streams have, in their seasons, important fisheries of shad and alewives.

Geology and Minerals.—The surface of Massachusetts is largely overlaid with drift materials, and the underlying rocks show quite generally strong marks of glacial action. The peculiar lenticular hills associated with glacial action and known as drumlins, kames, eskers, and "short hills" are largely distributed over the state. Most of the state's area is of Azoic or Archean formation. The extreme W. is Silurian and Cambrian and just W. of the Connecticut River another Silurian belt crosses the state from N. to S. The immediate valley of the Connecticut is mainly Triassic, abounding in fossiliferous and other interesting fossils. Mount Holyoke, Nonotuck and Tom are parts of a remarkably precipitous barrier of trap rock, through which the Connecticut River has burst its way. To the N. and NE. of Worcester a Cambro-Silurian belt extends into New Hampshire and in the vicinity of Boston and southward there is an irregular area of Cambrian and Cambro-Silurian age. The Carboniferous strata are a northeastward continuation of the Rhode Island coal field. All the Massachusetts coals thus far found are of the anthracite class, exceedingly hard and igniting with great difficulty. In the W. part of Martha's Vineyard there is an interesting fossiliferous tract of Miocene age and the Cape Cod region is Post Tertiary. The principal rock formations of Massachusetts are of gneissoid character with occasional dikes of true granite. This is largely quarried at at Rockport, Granville, Mount Fall River and Quincy and is an important article of export. The marbles and limestones of Berkshire are extensively wrought for building-stones and for lime-burners use. The Connecticut Valley affords a handsome brown sandstone. Soapstones (Andover) graphites (Star bridge) ochre (Way Head) corundum (Chester) feldspar, potter's clay and mica are among the other mineral products of economic value. Iron-ore of the best quality is mined and smelted in Berkshire co. The lakes of Plymouth and Bristol co. contain interesting deposits of limonite, formerly much utilized in the manufacture of iron. Quartz-sand for glass-makers use is a product of Berkshire. Lead has been mined in Mount Tom (Easthampton). Small quantities of gold and copper have been found in the Green Mountain tract and argentiferous galena has been mined at Newburyport and elsewhere. The granite quarried in 1905 was valued at $2,720,000.

Climate.—The winters of Massachusetts are severe and at all times of the year the climatic changes are liable to be sudden and extreme. The pre absence of chilling E. winds along the coast is a marked feature. The average annual rainfall is about 46 inches and severe droughts are uncommon.

Forests.—All the original or primeval forest has now been removed from the state. The western counties furnish birch and maple timber for chair stuff and beech for tool making in the central region chestnut timber is cut for fencing, railroad-ties, joinery etc. and the SE. affords hard and white pine and cedar largely cut for the general lumber trade for box-making etc. Much of the waste land of the state is covered with copse-wood, which is frequently cut over with profit, for fuel etc. The state has still remaining considerable areas covered with oak, ash and hickory. The total area of forest-land is about 1,500,000 acres.

Agricultural Resources.—Although the soil of Massachusetts is accounted in general somewhat sterile, the cultivated lands rank high in productiveness. There is much absolutely waste land in the state, at principally for copse-woods, or at best for pasturage, and the area of abandoned farm-lands is fast increasing, especially in the hill-country of the west. The beautiful and easily cultivated Connecticut Valley is hardly excelled in fertility by any region in the eastern United States, and even its outlying elevated sandy plains give remunerative crops. In Berkshire on much of the soil is generous and well adapted to dairying and general agriculture. Western Franklin co. makes a specialty of live-stock and butter. The Connecticut Valley, of tobacco, broom-corn and the cereals; Worcester co., of cheese and butter. Essex and Norfolk of market garden products. Middlesex of garden products and milk. Hay and forage crops are everywhere important productions. The principal agricultural crops were, in 1900: corn 1,545,046 bushels, oats, 560,786 bushels, barley 42,854 bushels, rye, 133,747 bushels, buckwheat, 77,149 bushels, potatoes, 1,261,464 bushels, and hay 550,067 tons. Near the coast the salt marshes, hitherto useful for their course hay only have been diked in some instances and have given excellent farming lands. Of the orchard fruits the apple is the most important. Cranberries are extensively grown in Barnstable and Plymouth cos. The value of the dairy products in 1900 was $12,885,774. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1899 was 237,792 pounds.

Manufactures. constitute by far the most important industrial interest of Massachusetts and her large towns are all busy seats of productive enterprises of this kind. The state ranks first among the states of the Union in the manufacture of textiles especially of cotton, the product of which is in value about one-third that of the entire United States. After cotton goods the largest industry of the state is the manufacture of worsteds and woollens. Massachusetts also holds first rank in the manufacture of boots and shoes and in that of paper and wood pulp. Boston is the centre of the American boot and shoe-leather and wool trades and is the seat of a large array of miscellaneous manufactures. Boots and shoes are made extensively at Haverhill, Lynn, Brockton and many other towns. Leather at Peabody etc. cotton goods at Fall River, Lowell, Adams, Lawrence, Pittsfield (biscopes), Holyoke, New Bedford, etc. paper at Holyoke, Lee, Northampton etc. woollens at Lawrence, Lowell, Holyoke, and elsewhere. Iron and other metallic goods and machinery at Worcester, Taunton, Fitchburg and Springfield. Fish-canning and preserving constitute the main industry of Gloucester while New Bedford, Newburyport, Salem, Chelsea, Andover, Somerville, Amherst, Woburn, Waltham, Everett, Wakefield, Middleboro, and Attleboro, and many other manufacturing towns employ numerous hands and much capital in a great variety of industrial pursuits. Prominent among these is the manufacture of nails, tacks, stoves, shoe-making machinery, carriages and wagons, sewing machines, electrical appliances, rubber goods, clocks and watches, musical instruments, fire-arms, jewelry, hardware and cutlery, glassware, linseed and fish oil, fertilizers, hats, clothing, screws, wire goods, boxes, rattan, willow and basket-work, chairs and other furniture, shoe-thread, sewing-silk and cotton bags and bagging, carpets, chemicals, verminicides, soap, rum, refined sugar, brick, small wares, straw goods, etc. The pork packing business and its accessory pursuits are at present largely carried on in and near Boston. Ship-building is carried on mostly at Boston, Newburyport, and Salem. The value of the textile product in 1900 was $214,500,890, clothing $15,632,604, leather boots and shoes, $135,364,165, foundry and machine-shop products $56,790,159, iron and steel $15,491,159, paper and wood-pulp $22,141,461, rubber (including elastic goods and rubber boots and shoes) $30,375,074. The tobacco and cigar manufacturers, in 1899 numbered 663, yielding a product of 113,216,313 cigars and 5,550,546 cigarettes.

Commerce.—The principal exports do a large coasting business, both eastward and southward and the construction of railroad lines and grain-elevators has given Boston a large export-trade to Europe, in addition to her former extensive business in that line. The exports are largely grain, cattle, flour, beef, pork and other products of the West, with iron, granite, and the manufactured goods of the state. The sea-trade and the harvesting and storage of ice for commercial purposes are of great importance in the western part of Massachusetts.

Fisheries.—Gloucester, Yarmouth and Provincetown are the principal fishing ports, but Newburyport, Marblehead, Salem, Beverly, Boston, Plymouth, and the minor ports do considerable deep-sea fishing, bringing in fares of cod, halibut, mackerel, herring, sea-trout, fish oil etc. from the banks and coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland, the Nanuet, Shetland, from the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the Bays of Fundy and Chaleur. The coast-fisheries are extensive, taking mainly cod, haddock, hake, pollock, mackerel, bluefish, bass, porpoise, etc., besides menhaden and other fish for oil and fish guano. The shad-awards and smelt-fisheries in the rivers are lucrative. Lobsters, oysters, clams, and other shell-fish are taken along the coast. New Bedford was at one time more extensively engaged in the whale-fishery than any other place in the world, furnishing upward of 400 vessels to the whaling fleet. Provincetown is likewise extensively engaged in the whale-fishery. Nan-tucket was also formerly very prominent in this field. This occupation although still continued with vigor, has very materially declined. Great attention has been given to the stocking of the fresh waters of the state with trout, salmon and alewives, black and striped bass and other useful food-fishes and to the erection of fish ways surmounting obstructions in the streams. There are state or national hatcheries at Woods Hole, Wilkesville, and Winchester.

Towns.—There are 14 in number viz. Barnstable, Dukes, Bristol, Dukes, Essex, Franklin, Hampden, Hampshire, Middlesex, Nantucket, Norfolk, Plymouth, Suffolk, and Worcester. The principal towns and cities are Boston (the capital) (pop. in 1900 560,892), Worcester (115,421), Fall River (104,883), Lowell (94,960), Cambridge (91,836), Lynn (68,513), Lawrence (62,669), New Bedford (51,443), Springfield, Somerville, Holyoke, Brockton, Salem, Chelsea, Haverhill, Malden, Newton and Taunton.

Education.—The free public school system of Massachusetts is almost coeval with her history and has long been recognized as one of the most efficient in this country. All the towns of any size have graded schools including primary, intermediate, grammar and high schools. There are state normal schools at Salem, Westfield, Worcester, Bridgewater, Fitchburg, Hyanus, Lowell, North Adams, and Framingham and a normal art school at Boston. There are many excellent private denominational and parochial schools and academies. The chief seat of learning is Harvard University at Cambridge with professional schools of science, law, divinity, medicine, dentistry, mining and agriculture, the last (the Bussey Institution) being to some extent a state institution. There is a state agricultural college at Amherst, which town is also the seat of Amherst College (Congregational). At Williamstown is Williams College (Congregational). Worcester is the seat of Clark University. Tufts College at Medford, is under Universalist auspices. The Boston University is a Methodist institution offering a wide range of special and professional instruction. Wellesley College at Wellesley, Smith College at Northampton, Mount Holyoke College, at South Hadley and Radcliffe College at Cambridge (the last named in affiliation with Harvard University) are for women. Theological training is given at Andover Theological Seminary (Congregational), Newton Theological Institute (Baptist), Boston University Tufts College, and at Cambridge. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Worcester Polytechnic Institute hold high rank. Important schools of music are the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston and the Boston University College of Music. The Bates Museum furnishes an advanced school in art. Among the leading charitable and benevolent institutions are the Calkins Institute for deaf-mutes at Northampton, the Perkins Institute for the Blind and the Massachusetts General Hospital at Boston, the Massachusetts School for Deaf-Mutes at Haverhill, the Massachusetts School for Feeble-Minded at Wal-tham, the state primary school for pauper children at Monmouth and various state reformatories.

Railroad.—The first railroad in the United States (used for hauling granite for the Bunker Hill Monument) was constructed in Massachusetts. The state was one of the first to enter largely in railroad construction. In 1833 it had over 100 miles of railroad. In 1844 626 miles. In 1850 1070 miles. In 1865 1297 miles. In 1870 1490 miles. In 1890 1915 miles. In 1899 2097 miles and in 1900 2111 miles.

Government.—The governor and the general state officers are chosen annually. The governor is assisted by an executive council of 8 members. The legislature styled the General Court, is composed of a Senate and a House of Representatives elected annually. The state senate is 14 members to the lower house of the federal Congress.

Population.—The original white population of Massachusetts was almost entirely of English descent, but since 1840 there has been a large immigration mainly of Irish and French Canadian. (Crest 175 the population was estimated at 260,000. In 1790 it was 378,787. In 1800 422,845. In 1810 419,040. In 1820 523,287. In 1830 610,406. In 1840 737,699. In 1850 994,514. In 1860 1,231,696. History.—The first permanent settlement within the present state of Massachusetts was made in 1620, when the colony of Plymouth was founded by the Pilgrim fathers, Puritan separatists from the Church of England. The colony of Massachusetts Bay was established in 1630—

30, its original leaders being members of the Puritanical party of the Church of England, which they sought to reorganize without prelacy but which they did not wish to abandon. Boston founded in 1630 was the capital of the colony. Harvard College was founded within a few years after the coming of the first settlers. The Massachusetts Bay Colony absorbed the Plymouth Colony in 1691. The Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay colonies developed the system of democratic local self-government in which the towns originally based upon the congregation was an autonomous unit. The colonies of Rhode Island and Connecticut were offshoots of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. The harsh yoke of whose theocracy early led to emigration. The island counties were from 1641 to 1686 under the separate governance of the Mayhew family who held from the Earl of Stirling and later from the Duke of York. In the middle of the seventeenth century Massachusetts extended her authority over the English settlements in Maine, which region remained subject to her until 1820.

In 1694 the charter of the Massachusetts Bay colony was declared forfeited by Charles II. and in 1696 the province was placed under the government of Sir Edmund Andros. In 1680 on the eve of the revolution in England the people rose and drove out Andros. A new charter was issued by William and Mary in 1692 by which the governor was appointed by the crown but under which Massachusetts managed as formerly her own affairs. Massachusetts took a leading part in the events preceding the war of independence, the first contests of that struggle taking place upon her soil. A state constitution was adopted in 1780. For many years Massachusetts was a stronghold of the Federalist party. In the Civil War under Governor John A. Andrew, Massachusetts distinguished herself by her efforts in behalf of the preservation of the union. The state has always occupied a prominent position in respect to benevolent, educational and humanitarian efforts and reforms.

Mecca, a township (town) of Marquette co. Wis. Pop. in 1900, 628.

Mecca, or Mekka, mak-ka (anc. Makra ba Arab. Makka) a city of Arabia, the most holy place of the Mohammedan world, capital of the Turkish province of Hejaz, 96 miles E of Jiddah. Lat. 21° 28' N. lon. 40° 8' E. It stands in a narrow sandy valley enclosed by barren hills from 200 to 500 feet or more high, and is supplied with water. In its centre are the sacred precincts, or mosque (El Haram) embracing a large area, enclosed by colonnades, and enclosing the Kaaba, or sacred house, a small cubical structure, erected on foundations that are attributed to Abraham. The streets of the city are wider than is usual in Eastern towns, and the houses are of stone, often three or more stories high, and well lighted. A newer city, built to the SE. of the sacred quarters, has a somewhat European aspect. The castle, near the Sherif's house, is thought by the Arabs to be impregnable. Mecca, which is the birth place of Mohammed, is annually filled at the time of the Haj (or pilgrimage) when apartments in almost every house are hired to strangers and thousands besides encamp outside the town. This pilgrimage, customary among the Arabs in early and idolatrous ages and subsequently enjoined by Mohammed on all his followers, is the foundation of Mecca's fame and the only source of her wealth. The number of pilgrims in a year is estimated at about 100,000 and by some much higher. It has materially lessened of late years. The kissing of the black stone of the Kaaba is the great object of the pilgrimage. Near the Kaaba are the pulpit of the Imam and the famous well of Zamzam alleged to be the one whence Hagar obtained water for Ishmael.

The colleges of Mecca have fallen to decay and the libraries, once rich, have totally disappeared. During the period of the pilgrimage the city is for three or four months one of the greatest marts in the East. Its merchants occasionally accumulate large fortunes. The Sherifs, or direct descendants of Mohammed, are now a numerous and widely spread body. The Grand Sherif nominally exercises authority in the name of the sultan, but there is now a wali (or governor) in his stead. The stationary population of Mecca is estimated at between 40,000 and 60,000. Only Muslims are permitted to enter the city, which however has been visited by a few Europeans. A railroad is in course of construction between Mecca and Damascus.

into the basin the salinity of the Mediterranean is greater than that of the Atlantic Ocean, and this disparity is progressively increasing to which is added a lowering of the surface-level. Hence, there is a steady inflow of the lighter waters of the ocean through the Strait of Gibraltar. The surface waters of the Mediterranean which are famed for their blue color and transparency have at times a markedly high temperature, but below 100 fathoms, or somewhat lower than the mean depth of the Gibraltar passage, to the greatest depth the temperature remains uniformly at 55°. The prevailing winds are from the SE and SW in spring and from the NE and NW during the rest of the year. They often blow suddenly and with great violence. The most remarkable are the Eora, in the Adriatic, and the burning Sirocco from the African Desert. Waterspouts are common on the coast of Asia Minor. Active volcanoes exist on the coast of Italy (Vesuvius) in the Lipari Islands (Stromboli) in Sicily (Etna) and the Cyclades (Island of Santorini). The Mediterranean abounds in fish and also furnishes fine coral and sponges.

The Mediterranean was called by the Hebrews the Great Sea. The Phoenicians are the first people known to have extended their commerce along its coasts. The Greeks afterwards disputed it with them and with the Carthaginians. After the destruction of Carthage the Romans were sole masters of its shores. In the latter part of the Middle Ages Pisa, Genoa, and Venice were great maritime powers in the Mediterranean. At their close the Venetians almost monopolized its commerce.

It is situated on a splendid harbor formed by a peninsula in the shape of a sickle (whence the original Greek name of Zancle) with mountains towering in the immediate background and its streets command superb views of the Gallician main-land. There is little in the appearance of Messina to reflect the great antiquity of the town, which has been a sufferer by earthquakes and other calamitous visitations. It is well laid out with broad thoroughfares paved with blocks of lava. A fine esplanade or Marina (Corso Vittorio Emanuele, skirts the sea. The principal open spaces are the Piazza del Duomo (Cathedral Square) with a handsome fountain and the Piazza dell' Annunziata, with a statue of Don John of Austria. Among the interesting edifices are the cruciform Norman cathedral of whose original structure little now remains, the church of Santa Annunziata dei Catalani the oldest Norman church of the city, the church of Santa Maddalena, the fine Palazzo Municipale, the villa Rocca Guelfonia and the municipal hospital a vast and venerable pile. The old citadel which defended the harbor has just been demolished. The university dating from the sixteenth century has about 650 pupils. Messina is, next to Palermo, the most important commercial city of Sicily and its harbor presents a scene of extraordinary animation. Messina has enjoyed a reputation for its silk fabrics. The fisheries are important.

About the beginning of the 6th century A.C. a colony of Messenians was introduced into Zancle and the name of the town was changed to Messene (L. Messana).
